EVOLVE NOVEL SCHEME.

PRODUCERS TO OFFER PICK OF STARS TO EXHIBITORS.

By Grace Kingsley.

Since the independent stand taken by exhibitors regarding the open market, many of the producers are rushing to get into line and be first on hand with their wares.

Paramount and Artcraft have evolved a scheme by which coordination is worked out between the two distributing systems. According to the new arrangement, the output of these concerns, after August 5, will be booked in star series, the exhibitor taking the stars whom his patrons prefer. For Artcraft, Mary Pickford will make eight pictures annually; Douglas Fairbanks, seven; David Griffith, six; Elsie Ferguson, seven; Cecil de Mille, six—two of these with Geraldine Farrar as star—and George Cohan, two.

Paramount's record will be eight each for Olga Petrova, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, Sussue Hayakawa, Fannie Ward, Vivian Martin and Wallace Reid; three with George Beban, three with Billie Burke, two with Ann Pennington.

Champ Vamp Arrives.

Bringing with her seventeen trunkloads of clothes, five servants and a parent or two, Miss Theda Bara, most popular of Fox stars and world-famed for putting the "ire" in "vampire," arrived in Los Angeles yesterday via the Santa Fe. She was met by a delegation of Fox coworkers, who enthusiastically welcomed her with cheers, flowers and fruit.

This is Miss Bara's first trip west, the effete East always having claimed her. It is even said she was born on the edge of the Sahara Desert. Be this as it may, Miss Bara declared the part of her trip which principally interested her was the desert, and that she knew it for what it was the moment she spied it, on account of the number of desert pictures in which she appeared.

Yes, Miss Bara is just as fascinating in real life as on the screen.

The first picture which Miss Bara will make in the West will be an elaborate visualization of Sardou's "Cleopatra," which has been suggested by thousands of the actress's admirers as specially suited to her peculiar genius. Monroe Salisbury has been engaged to play a leading role in support of the divine Theda.

Surprise Note.

Bessie Love has just finished her first starring vehicle under the Ince banner. This is the much-heralded story of the circus, in which Miss Love will be presented in a role far removed from any heretofore seen on the screen. In it the young woman performs all sorts of stunts not at all to be expected of this mild-faced young lady.

Billie Courts Thalia.

William Wickersham, well-known dancer, has just completed an engagement with the Bernstein company, wherein though a dancer, he acted right out on the stage, appearing as leading man, in a play within a play. The name of the story is "Loyalty," and has Murdock McQuarrie, co-starred with Betty Brice.

Wickersham has lately returned from New York, whence he brings the very latest dances, and it is some of these he introduces in the film.

Desert Air Stuff.

William S. Hart was notified, last week, by a prominent florist, that he would receive fifty dollars' worth of American Beauty roses every Sunday morning for an indefinite period. Upon being questioned the florist claimed to be unable to supply any information as to the source of the gift. Hart is very anxious to learn the name of this generous admirer, even though, due to his absence from the city, the flowers appear to be doomed to blush unseen for a period of several weeks.

Actor From Ground Up.

Lon Chaney, Universal character actor, who made a big hit in "Hell Morgan's Girl," while famous for his marvelous make-ups in different roles, claims the characterization must go far deeper than "crepe" and grease-paint.

"You've got to be under the skin of the character," said Chaney the other day, as he rolled cigarettes between scenes, "and you've got to know all about the fellow you're acting.

Earnest Student Item.

Dorothy Phillips, who appears this week at the Superba, in the role of Nora in a visualization of Ibsen's "The Doll's House," is an earnest student of the great Norwegian playwright, and in working out the screen characterization did not content herself with merely thinking out the role, but memorized it completely.

Taps for Tye.

The film world as represented at the Bernstein studio, has gone into mourning for Murdoch MacQuarrie's bulldog. Tye, one of an old and aristocratic family, who has recently departed for the happy hunting ground.

Tye was a well-known film star himself, having appeared with his distinguished master in a good many productions. He leaves a sorrowing family of one son, Toby, also well known to screen fame.

Toby is not yet reconciled to his father's death and still sniffs hopefully about the house, and brings Tye's collar to lay at his master's feet.

Steals McRae's Stuff.

Knowing it could be done, on account of having seen it accomplished so often in pictures, B. F. Reynolds of the staff of the Times-Universal Animated Weekly cameramen, raced his automobile against a train, and won, the other day, and thereby covered himself with glory, since he performed a service for his government.

Reynolds had been photographing the arrival from San Francisco and departure for the navy yard at Philadelphia of several hundred Filipinos who had crossed the Pacific to enter the naval service. Shortly after the train pulled out, two of the Filipinos were discovered to have been left behind.

The Southern Pacific's representatives thereupon asked Reynolds if he would take the men in his automobile and try and meet the train at San Gabriel, the first stop. The news pictorial man quickly piled the men in his car and started away at a fast clip, reaching San Gabriel a few minutes in advance of the train. There he turned the men over to the waiting government official.

Bernstein Flits.

Isadore Bernstein, at the Bernstein Studio, has left for New York, where he expects to see some of the exchange men. He will probably visit the Chicago convention on his way home.

Just Couldn't Stay Away.

Seena Owen Walsh, Fine Arts star, who has been shopping in New York, is expected home this week, bearing a new pink silk shirt for George Walsh, some wonderful what-you-may-callums for baby Patricia, and a flock of new hats for herself.

Arabian Nights in Miniature.

A picturization of the Arabian Nights tale, "Aladdin," is being made by the Fox company, with the kid actors playing the leading roles. The Franklyn brothers are directing, and the cast includes Georgie Stone, Carmen De Rue, Virginia Corbin and Violet Radcliffe.

Pulled His Hair?

"I saw your husband, Wilton Lackaye, last night," said a regular first-nighter to Ruth Lackaye, the pretty purveyor of character roles in Balboa-made pictures.

"But Wilton never was my husband," said Ruth dimpling. "I only married his brother."

"How could you tell them apart?" pursued her questioner.

"Oh, I always knew my husband, for he was the one who didn't wear a toupee."

Mary Gets Prize Gift.

Mary Pickford has received many novel gifts since she became the "world's sweetheart," but few have the sentiment attached to them that belongs to a little comb, just delivered to Mary. The comb was accompanied by a tearful little pink note from an admirer, stating that it had no further place in the household, inasmuch as the owner had died. The owner was "Toodles," and "Toodles" was an angora cat that had just disposed of the last of its nine lives.

Writes the Silent Dialogue.

H. Sheridan Bickers, well known in literary circles as a distinguished British speaker, playwright, dramatic critic and editor, has been engaged to supervise the construction of the sub-titles in Bessie Barriscale and J. Warren Kerrigan features, under the Paralta banner.

Graft Note.

Ednamae Wilson, the tiny actress of the Bernstein studios, was very busy visiting the children in the neighborhood of that institution last Friday. It developed that Ednamae was enlisting the interest and sympathies of the youngsters in making an onslaught on Providence in order to co-ordinate their forces in praying for good weather, so that the company might not be deterred from making a trip to Balboa to film some scenes in "Justice." Thus was Ednamae's mother all at once enlightened as to the reason for the young lady's buying a whole dollar's worth of all-day suckers in one bunch, and thus were explained the presence of so many simultaneously dirty faces throughout the neighborhood that morning.

William Fox Should Worry.

Despite the continued cloudy weather which has prohibited exterior work in the William Fox studio in Hollywood, the new Gladys Brockwell photoplay, being made under the direction of Otis Turner, is progressing rapidly.

George Walsh, who is now playing under the direction of Paul Powell, is also working under lights, while his fellow-players are preparing for a long sea trip during which scenes will be made on shipboard.

R. A. Walsh and Richard Stanton are engaged in the cutting-rooms on recently-completed films. Director Stanton will begin a new Dustin Farnum subject within a week.

Dashing Dot is Busy.

Dot Farley, Fox comedienne, is knitting socks for soldiers between scenes of Hank Mann's comedies. She received the names of a lot of injured soldiers from England, and has picked out all the one-legged ones, as thus she will get twice as much credit for half the work.

Daniel has Nothing on Her.

Nellie Allen, Universal star, has been performing in "animal stuff" for the first time in her career, during the past week. She was required to plunge into a pool with four lions, but after reading Charlie Van Loan's story in the Saturday Evening Post, in which Van Loan makes the animal keeper in his story inform the heroine with all the authority of Ernest Thompson Seton that "there's no fight in a wet cat," she went at it cheerfully, and found out that Charlie was right. She says she hopes they'll always dip 'em first, when she has a scene with the lions.

Miss Dalton is Queen.

With a spectacular disregard of expense, John Blackwood, in a 200-word telegram, informs us that Dorothy Dalton, Ince star, brought her four weeks' vacation from picture work to a brilliant end last Thursday night. She appeared at the head of the grand march in company with Gov. Gavens at the motion-picture ball held in Seattle. The ball wound up a three-day convention of the exhibitors of Oregon. Miss Dalton, the telegram goes on to say, showed the Portland society women the sort of gown they might wear if they cared to spend money enough to purchase similar feminine garb from Paris.

Beban Close to Nature.

George Beban is now working under the direction of Donald Crisp on the last of his famous Italian characterizations until September 1. The star has a long tour and camping trip planned with which he refuses to let trifles like work interfere. Consequently he will shortly depart for the mountains, and will not "don the garlic" again until fall.

Sounds Reasonable Anyhow.

Location man Van Zimmerman of the Lasky studio recently appeared at a local powder works with a view of finding the manager in order to secure his permission to film certain scenes in the vicinity of the powder plant. Forgetting that his name was practically the same as the German gentleman whose recent communications have been the cause of much newspaper comment, Van Zimmerman sent his card in to the manager, and was promptly seized by two of the guards at the plant, and had a very exciting few minutes trying to explain that he was an ardent American.

Too Mean for Anything.

Just as the members of the Lasky studio were getting ready to dedicate their new swimming pool with a diving and swimming contest, along comes Douglas Fairbanks with the request that he may have it for use in the scenes of his forthcoming production. Consequently the aquatic exhibiton will be postponed until Mr. Fairbanks runs out of film.

Neilan Out Among 'Em.

Marshal Neilan, the Lasky director, has returned from his vacation in New York, laden down with a choice collection of gold bricks, counterfeit money and deeds to Central Park. Mr. Neilan will take a brief rest to recover from his vacation, and then begin work on the filming of the third Mary Pickford production to be made in the West.

Adam and Eve Stuff

The high cost of living strikes no terror to the soul of the Pooh-Bah of Santa Cruz Island, according to Lynn F. Reynolds, Universal Bluebird director, who recently finished filming the scenes of an island story written by Waldemar Young and himself. Reynolds had his company disporting in the surf and exploring the grottos of Santa Cruz Island for several weeks, and he knows whereof he speaks.

The Pooh-Bah is the single male resident of the place, the only other inhabitants being Mrs. Pooh-Bah. They grow everything from the expensive spud to the priceless rutabaga. They have cows that furnish lacteal sustenance and chickens that lay better eggs.

"But that isn't all," narrated Reynolds. "Every week-end the old man Pooh-Bah cruises over to Santa Barbara in a fifty-foot power boat he owns and brings back with him a sight-seeing party at something like two a head for the trip, lunch included. His wife, of course, never knows how many to prepare lunch for, so she doesn't prepare lunch at all, And it's just as well. If the channel is rough the sight-seers get seasick, and if it is smooth, the wily skipper keeps the boat in the trough of what waves there are until it rolls sufficiently to take away their appetites. Once recently she told me the old man picked up a party of sailors and it was rather embarrassing for Mrs. Pooh-Bah, as the men of the sea stowed away everything in sight and clamored for more."

Their Favorite Sport Now.

Even royalty itself romps around these days and gets a permit to watch Charlie Chaplin work, and the nobility is no treat to him. Mr. Chaplin was the center of attraction for many of the celebrities who are sojourning in Southern California, as indicated by the presence of many distinguished guests at the Lone Star studios, this week, who watched Charlie in the flesh executing his side-splitting and peculiar antics in the filming of his latest photoplay.

Prince Paul Troubetzkoy, noted Russian sculptor, painter and poet, who is in Los Angeles, accompanied by the Princess for the purpose of giving an exhibition of his art works at Exposition Park, which opened yesterday, extended his visit by several hours, declaring poetically that time did not exist when in such interesting and delightful company as that of Chaplin.

Bhai Suchet Singh, B.C.S., educator and philosopher of Ferozepore, province of Punjab, India, who made a special trip from the East, where he just completed an advanced course in economics at Columbia University, New York, after watching Chaplin work several hours, insisted that he would like to have an X-ray picture of the Hon. Mr. Chaplin's cranium. He assured the funmaker that it must be even more marvelous than the interior of an adding machine. Charlie has no patent on his mental processes, so he refused.

THOSE WINNING BUNGALOWS.

Keystone Leading Man Bets on Them and Gets Dinner.

Hal Cooley, leading man at the Keystone studio, won an odd bet one day last week. Eddie Cline, director, and Peggy Pearce, one of Mack Sennett's blonde beauties, made the assertion that more people of the profession lived in apartments than in bungalows. Now it happens that the losers of the bet have bungalows and the winner lives in an apartment. Being single, Hal's visions of a man's happy life centers around a California bungalow.

So a dinner wager was made as to whether more Keystoners lived in cosy bungalows or in cold, matter-of-fact apartments. When the canvass was finished fifty-eight of both sexes extolled the beauties of bungalow life while only forty-one confessed to life in luxurious apartments.

One prominent scenario writer acknowledged possessing a bungalow, but said his only objection to them was that they were unusually small and hard to find.

Hal Cooley was so enthusiastic at winning the dinner from the crestfallen Eddie Cline and Peggy Pearce that he announced his intention not only to get a bungalow, but the necessary accessory, a gasoline go-cart.

LAWYERS WILL SEE "LAW THAT FAILED."

It is expected that nearly 500 members of the Bar Association of Los Angeles will attend the special performance of "The Law that Failed," at the Burbank on next Wednesday afternoon, as the guests of the management. "The Law that Failed" is said to be of special interest to lawyers and judges, and much attention is being attracted among the members of the legal profession.

"The Law that Failed" deals with the technical point of the law known as corpus delicti. For the uninitiated, this refers to the fact tha a man accused of murder cannot be convicted if the body of the murderer's victim is not discovered.

SCREEN.

Oh! Oh! Oh!

ARBUCKLE AS ROMEO.

DOZEN PICTURES AT A DOZEN PICTURE SHOW SHOPS.

The motion-picture army has retaken another trench—or rather another theater. One is so likely to imagine himself a war correspondent instead of a commenter on things theatrical when writing about the gigantic struggle between the picture people and the "legits." Anyway, pretty Mary Pickford, with a happy company, will this week roam the redwood forests on the screen at Clune's Auditorium.

Quinn's new theater seems to be making a "go" of it, and for another week will continue to show "The Garden of Allah," while all the other picture houses offer new bills, featuring every kind of character and every imaginable theme from serious-faced actors in Ibsen drama to "Fatty" Arbuckle in the role of the gentle Romeo.

This week is notable for the many bright stars that will illuminate the firmament of filmdom, among them being Mary Pickford, Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton, Louise Vale, James Morrison, Helen Ware, Thomas Santschi, Bessie Barriscale, Ethel Barrymore, Dorothy Dalton, Clara Kimball Young, Joseph Kilgour, Violet Palmer, Eric Mayne, Jack Dean, Mabel Van Buren, Jane Wolfe, Billy Jacobs, Flora Finch, Lon Chaney, William Stowell, Dorothy Phillips, Frances Nelson, Herbert Rawlinson, Neva Gerber, Alice Brady and Mr. "Fatty" Arbuckle.

Clune's Auditorium.

Starting a new and consistent policy, which W. H. Clune claims will make the Auditorium the greatest motion-picture theater west of the Mississippi, Mr. Clune will tomorrow begin the exhibition of a line of the world's best photoplays.

The present week's feature is to be Mary Pickford's latest Artcraft picture, "A Romance of the Redwoods," directed by Cecil de Mille, who also collaborated with Jeanie Macpherson in writing the play. The scenes are laid in the days of '49, and Miss Pickford is said to have a role entirely different from anything she has ever done before.

Supporting the star are Charles Ogle, Raymond Hatton, Winter Hall and Tully Marshall.

American.

"The Girl Who did not Care," the first of the big Ivan feature films, which have been exclusively booked for Los Angeles by the American Theater, will begin an engagement at that theater today.

"The Girl Who did not Care" is a six-reel production, based on the story by Don Dundas, and was enacted before the camera by an all-star cast, headed by Louise Vale and James Morrison, and including Donald Hall and Frankie Mann.

The story concerns a long-lost son who returns home to find his father alienated from his mother by the brazen charms of a vengeful girl. The son's attempt to reunite his father and mother in the chains of holy love gives the story a vital human interest.

Quinn's Rialto.

If you have failed to see "The Garden of Allah" at Quinn's beautiful new Rialto Theater you have missed one of the richest stories and one of the most spectacular pictures ever shown in Los Angeles. Moreover, if you neglect to see the photoplay this week you may never again have an opportunity to view it. This is to be the last week of its exhibition at the Rialto, and, therefore, in the city, as Mr. Quinn has purchased the exclusive rights in Los Angeles.

Clune's Broadway.

If half the Los Angeles admirers of Bessie Barriscale go to see her this week in "Bawbs o' the Blue Ridge," Clune's Broadway Theater will be compelled to run continuous performances from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. and from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. "Bawbs o' the Blue Ridge" is a mountain fantasy, concerning the romance that served to lighten the burdensome existence of Barbara Colby, an orphan, and companion of bugs, bees, frogs and birds.

From a photographic standpoint the photoplay is said to be the best piece of work yet produced by the Ince-Triangle plant.

Supporting Miss Barriscale are Arthur Shirley, Joe Dowling and J. Frank Burke.

Woodley.

"Oriental Love," the "made-in India" Sennett-Keystone comedy, showing the manners and customs, the palaces, temples, harems and streets of India, and said to be the best thing ever put out by the Keystone people, is to be the big attraction at Woodley this week, beginning today. The magical effects seen in this remarkable picture are largely due to Surendra Guha, "the magician of the camera," whose services were secured in filming the production.

The companion feature is "The Dark Road," a human-interest story starring Dorothy Dalton.

Still another feature on the bill is a Woodley Special, showing the Keystone girls on the golf links.

Tally's Broadway.

A photodramatic version of "The Easiest Way," one of the greatest successes Belasco ever staged in America, is the attraction at Tally's Broadway this week. The photoplay, directed by Albert Capelani and starring Clara Kimball Young and Joseph Kilgour, is said to lose none of the force of the original production, but, on the contrary, it adds many new and interesting features. While the play frankly exposes the corrupt life of the city, it is said that no offensive situations are employed in the telling of the story on the screen.

Symphony.

Because public insistence, in the form of capacity audiences, have made it seem advisable, the management of the Symphony Theater has announced that the super photo spectacle, "The Call of Her People," shall continue its engagement for a second week, beginning today.

The play is admitted to be the most noteworthy screen effort featuring Ethel Barrymore. The prolonging of the engagement required the postponement of the Frances

HIS MELODIES TRAVEL.

CADMAN WORKS ARE HEARD IN DISTANT LANDS.

When a composer has his piano sonata played in Buenos Aires and his songs given in Bombay and Calcutta, it may be taken to indicate that his circlet of fame is surrounding a good portion of the world. Such is the good fortune, among many other items of success, of Charles Wakefield Cadman, who is at present residing in this city.

Mr. Cadman's A major sonata was recently given a very successful rendition at Buenos Aires by Mercedes Linari. The four American Indian songs were recently presented at Bombay and also at Calcutta. Mr. Cadman's "At Dawning" has been heard the world over, and "The Land of the Sky Blue Water" has sent its permeating strains to the ears of the people of many different lands.

Local Girl Wins.

A local girl has just won a distinct honor in a musical way in the East. As a member of the graduating class of the New England Conservatory of Music, Miss Martha Baird, formerly a pupil of Morton F. Mason of Pasadena, has just been awarded the prize in the annual competition for the Mason & Hamlin grand pianoforte. This prize is offered seniors and post-graduate students. The judges were Dr. Carl Muck, Carl Freidberg and C. M. Loeffler. The prize-winner did the work of three years in two.

Miss Baird's mother was a church organist in Pasadena and at her death was a member of the faculty of the University of Southern California.

Miss Baird made her debut at the Gamut Club House in 1915.

Third Orpheus.

The Orpheus Club will give its third concert this season, the 15th inst., at Trinity Auditorium. The club will be assisted by May MacDonald-Hope, pianist, and Maud Reeves-Barnard, mezzo-soprano.

Friday Club Chorus.

The Friday Morning Club chorus, assisted by Mrs. Irwin J. Muma, mezzo-soprano, and Miss Gertrude Cohen, pianiste, will present a musical programme Friday morning before the club members and guests. Mrs. Charles G. Stivers is directing the chorus.

Benefit Concert.

Prominent local musicians united their efforts in the making of an attractive benefit concert to aid Mrs. James A. Barackman Wednesday evening at the Friday Morning Club House. Those taking part included Edith Lillian Clark, pianiste, and Fred Ellis, baritone, assisted by Miss Helen Root at the piano; instrumental trio composed of G. Allan Hancock, 'cello; Olney J. Dobbings, violin, and Albert J. Adams, piano; Bertha Winslow Vaughn, soprano, assisted by Archibald Sessions at the piano. The programme included a very excellent list of selections from works by MacDowell, Tschaikowsky, Debussy, Gade, among others.

Pupils' Busy Days.

In anticipation of the closing of schools for the summer the end of this month, there seems to be a grand hastening of pupils' recitals.

One of the important events of the present week in this line will be the commencement concert Tuesday evening in the auditorium of the First Methodist Church, on the corner of Sixth and Hill streets. This follows a series of five individual recitals by graduating seniors of the college of music.

During the past week there have been two recitals by the college, that of Mrs. Lillian S. Ayers, pianist, pupil of Miss C. Adelaide Trobridge, assisted by Miss Zetie Steele Duncan, mezzo-soprano, which took place last night, and that of Miss Erma M. Parker, pianiste, assisted by Miss Laura Porter, soprano; Miss Ruth Adams, accompanist, and Miss May Listman, pianiste. Both programmes were well rendered and very enjoyable.

The programme for the commencement concert Tuesday night includes vocal, piano, violin, organ and quartette numbers, as follows: Piano, "The Trout" (Schubert-Heller,) Miss Ruth Marie Smith; mezzo-soprano, "My Heart at thy Sweet Voice" (Saint-Saens,) Miss Margaret Dick; piano, "Du bist die Ruh" (Schubert-Liszt,) Miss Fay Savage; violin, Adagio Pathetique (Godard,) Miss Marian Dolly; piano, "The Mountain" (Brainard,) Mrs. Lillian Ayers; soprano, "Fear Not Ye" from the Easter captata "The Resurrection" (Clyde Collison,) Miss Margaret Atwater, with violin obbligato by Miss Crain and the composer at the piano; piano, Nocturne in G Flat (Sgambati,) Miss Melzena Stephens; violin, Romance (C. E. Pemberton,) Miss Earnestine Crain; piano, "The Lark" (Balakireo,) Miss Lucy Smith; soprano, "Haymaking" (Needham,) Miss Ruth Walker, with Miss Louise Walker at the piano; piano, Theme and Variations (Tschaikowsky,) Miss Mabel Culver; mezzo soprano, "Il Libro Santo" (Pinsuti,) Miss Zetie Duncan; piano, Ballade (Bartlett,) Miss Erma Parker; 'cello, "The Swan (Saint-Saens) and "Musette" (Offenbach,) Miss Eugene Egloff, with Miss Guelph McQuinn at the piano; piano, "In Autum" (Moszowski,) Miss Ruth Adams; Ladies' Quartette, "Sweet and Low" (Hawley) and "Little Papoose" (Sherwood,) the Misses Moore, Wyatt, Laning and Hewitt; organ, overtrue to "William Tell" (Rossini-Buck,) Miss Florence Benedict.

Synthetic School.

Students of the Synthetic School of Music, No. 1006 South Westlake avenue, will give a public recital tomorrow evening. Included in the list of those taking party will be pupils of Richard Schliewin, violinist; Charles Henri de la Plate and Mrs. Henry G. Sanger, vocalists; Ruth Deardorff-Shaw and Madge Patton Sullivan, pianists, and Melia E. Sullivan, expression and dancing.

Solo Singer Assists.

With Catherine H. Shank assisting as soloist, pupils of Leyde Leigh and Scheiffman presented a programme consisting of compositions by Bach, Dvorak, Tschaikowsky, Clementi, Cadman, Grieg, Schumann, Chopin, MacDowell and Godard yesterday afternoon at No. 1534 South Figueroa street. The following students took part: Edna Mueller, Lois Olmsted, Reba Phillips, Margaret Morgan, Elizabeth Schaefer, Margaret Wall; Sadie Douglass, assisted Mrs. Shank as accompanist in her song numbers, which included three by Coleridge-Taylor.

Vocal Pupils.

Vocal pupils of Charlotte Elizabeth Wands, coloratura soprano, were heard in recital Thursday evening at the Gamut Club. Many charming song numbers afforded the students of singing opportunity to display their gifts to advantage. The following took part: Dr. J. F. Hill, Thekla Griewe, Mabelle Hunt, G. O. Vogt, Lillian McDermott, Dr. R. Larson, Isabelle M. Ames, Helen Morgan, Fred Genee, Harriet Elder, Lydia Maurer, Edwin Ash, Almira Lothrop, Ercell Hudson, Olive Whalian and James Burroughs. The programme was opened with a violin solo by Bernardine Whalen. Mildred Pray assisted at the piano.

Pleasing Recital.

Pupils of Miss Drevna Thomson gave a light and pleasing programme Friday evening at the Wilshire Presbyterian Church. The following were heard: Margaret Natillie Bunn, Elizabeth Rose Daum, Frances West, Florence Virginia Davis, Katherine Wilma Hunt, Sherwood Leavitt, Anna May Hunt, Joseph Popkin, Lucy Russell Guerrant, Elizabeth West, Ruth Lorena Hunt, Walter Simpson and Jessie Jane Hunt.

Claude Elwood Married.

Claude Elwood Albright, well known from her work in song and opera in this city, is now the wife of Edward Wadsworth Roberts. The marriage took place recently at Orlando, Fla., and Mr. and Mrs. Roberts are now living at St. Petersburg, Fla. The bride is the daughter of Col. J. G. Albright.

Organists' Final.

With Ray Hastings and Harold Gleason as the interpreters of the programme, the American Guild of Organists, Southern California Chapter, will give its final service-recital for the season Monday evening at St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral. The brief service preceding the recital will be sung by the choir of the Pro-Cathedral, directed and accompanied by Ernest Douglas. The programme follows: Christmas offertory (Lemmens,) Elevation in A flat (Guilmant,) Romance Sans Paroles (Bonnet) and Grand Chorus (Dubois,) Hastings; Toccata and Fugue in D minor (Bach,) "In the Morning," (Grieg,) "Oriental Sketch" (Arthur Bird) and Toccata in F major (Widor,) Henry Gleason.

A clever young high school girl, Miss Eunice Abernethy, is to give a piano recital Wednesday afternoon at the Hollywood High School Auditorium, No. 1521 Highland avenue. She will be assisted by Howard McCreary Wylie, who has a pleasing tenor voice. The following attractive programme will be presented by the two students:

Prelude and fugue, in F minor (Bach,) "Pastorale" (Scarlatti-Tausig) and sonata in A major (Scarlatti,) Miss Abernethy; "The Star" (Rogers,) "The Bitterness of Love" (Dunn) and "Hungarian Love Song" (Roeckel,) Mr. Wylie; valse in E minor, Etude, Op. 10, No. 12, Polonaise in A major and Scherzo in B flat minor (Chopin,) Miss Abernethy; "King Duncan's Daughters" (Allitsen,) "My Lady's Bower" (Temple) and "Good-by" (Tosti,) Mr. Wylie; "Sposalizio" and "Cantique d'Amour" (Liszt,) Miss Abernethy.

Henry Ward Welsh will assist as accompanist.

Becker Pupils.

Pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Thilo Becker will be heard in recital Tuesday evening at the Gamut Club. Several Becker pupils have already individually given programmes, but the coming affair will combine the work of a number.

French Opera and Art.

Opera, architecture and art, and their beauty and meaning in France, will be sketched in picture and sound by Dr. Bruce Gordon Kingsley this afternoon at Trinity Auditorium. This will be the first time he has ever given this particular lecture in Los Angeles, though his experienced treatment of similar subjects has been frequently enjoyed here. Florence Wallace, recently returned from New York, will assist in the musical part of the programme, which will include selections from various notable operas as follows:

Minuet from "Iphigenie" (Gluck,) overture, "La Dame Blanche" (Boieldieu,) "Meditation" from "Thais" (Massenet,) selection, "Les Huguenots" (Meyerbeer,) Michaela's aria from "Carmen" (Bizet,) gavotte from "Mignon" (Thomas,) "Dance of the Priestesses of Dagon" from "Samson and Delila" (Saint-Saens) and fantasie, "Faust" (Gounod.)

The stereopticon views will conduct the spectators through England and France, affording a chance to see among other places, London, Versailles, the gorgeous abode of kings; the Saint Chappile, a miracle in red, blue and gold; the Colossal Arch de Triomphe; Paris and its great Grand Operahouse, Monte Carlo, etc.

Closing Schubert Affair.

The rose tea to be given Wednesday afternoon by the Schubert Club at their headquarters, the ballroom of the Hotel Alexandria, will be the closing musical and social affair of the club for this season. The musical programme is as follow:

Quartette, Op. 18, No. 4, first movement (Beethoven) and "To a Wild Rose" (MacDowell-Fuhrer,) Bessie Fuhrer String Quartette; Cavatina from "La Favorita" (Donnizeti,) Mrs. Frederick Jungquist; solo dance, "The Spirit of Spring," Miss Merrill Smith, assisted by Eleanor Masard at the piano; "On the Shores of the Sea" (Dunkler,) and "Minuet a l'Antique" (Paderewski,) string quartette; solo dance, "The Gavotte" (Ted Shawn,) Miss Smith.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Winner in the contest for the best musical setting for Wilbur D. Nesbit's "Your Flag and My Flag," conducted by the P. F. Valland Company of Chicago, was Frederick L. Ryder. Nearly 700 manuscripts were submitted.

Adele and Rosamond Marcus, pupils of Julian Pascal, pianist, played at the Spanish department luncheon of the Ebell Club Thursday. These little girls, 10 and 13 years of age, have such remarkable technique and understanding for their years that, it is said, they seem to be inspired. They were made honorary members of the Matinee Musical Club at its recent May festival.

Miss Pearl Wafer, soprano, was heard in a musical programme at the meeting of the Woman's Improvement Club of Huntington Park last Tuesday afternoon.

One of the interesting features of the Victor records for June is a selection by the Elman String Quartette, the new organization formed by the popular violinist, which includes, beside himself, Adolf Bak, second violin; Karl Rissland, viola, and Rudolph Nagel, 'cello. Song numbers by Giuseppe de Luca and Amelita Galli-Curci, as well as selections from Victor Herbert's new "Eileen" are among the features.

A delightful musical was given by Mabelle Lewis Case and her pupils Monday afternoon at the Sierra Madre Women's Club. Miss Irene Zeller sang a new song, "Just a Little Sunshine," by Mrs. Case.

COMPOSER.

A World Genius.

NEW OPERA BY PUCCINI.

ANOTHER SUCCESS BY ONE OF THE GREAT MUSIC MAKERS.

By Jeanne Redman.

Signor Puccini has produced a new opera. Now Puccini is to opera what a five-card suit with three honors and one quick trick on the side is to bridge, or what H. G. Wells is to novel writing, or what Chase is to portrait painting. A successful opera, a sound bid, a six-best-seller and a faithful reproduction of feature.

It is remarkable that so much is to be said about anything so regular as the above-mentioned certainties; but to their potentialities there is no limit. Puccini is, without question, the most popular composer now living, and it was the premiere of his new opera, "La Rondine," which made this season at Monte Carlo gay in spite of the war. The music-loving and society-loving people of Paris and the Continent went to Monte Carlo to hear the new opera, and acclaim it another success. Puccini really cannot fail. There are those who think that he fell down obviously in "The Girl of the Golden West," which certainly is not a popular opera, but Puccini is not one of their number. He thinks it quite as good as the rest, unless we except "Tosca," which, everybody knows, is by far the best thing he has ever done. The "Girl" is quite sufficiently Puccinlesque, for the composer can be nothing else than characteristic; but the combination of a Belasco out West story and rich Italian music of the modern school—or any Italian school for all that—is as unholy as ice cream and Roquefort cheese. That is not an adequate simile: I think the out West stories of Belasco more closely resemble a Peche Melba set upon a shredded wheat biscuit, while for Italian opera we might substitute Gorgonzola instead of Roquefort. The "Girl" was really ghastly, with its familiar Puccini crescendi and skillful use of staccato and the modern use of harmonics. And then those awful words: "Where is Minnie?" "In the other room" (sung, not recitative,) "with that dog Johnson from Sacramento!" Nothing, of course, could be more absurd, unless it is Minnie's coquetry with the aforesaid Johnson when she tells him how her mother loved her father and how she will never marry until she can love truly, as her mother did, and again when she tells him that she is not good enough for him. Johnson has one song which ran for a time, the homestead one with the lilting accompaniment in sixths, the words of which are so besottedly sentimental. Then there was that little waltz in the first act which was agreeable not only because the words consisted almost entirely of "la, la," but for its very pleasant rhythm and its simplicity. Upon the whole, however, the "Girl" has been consigned by the public to the limbo where she belongs.

"La Tosca" is gorgeous music. A puerile tale, but satisfying music. It is the finest thing of Puccini's and well-liked withal. It has all of the qualities which go to make up the best of the composer. His intense emotional appeal, his songful legato passages, his soothing of the senses and his call to them—it is all in Tosca, which, however, is not so popular as that perennial pair, "La Boheme" and "Mme. Butterfly."

Nothing in modern opera has a stronger hold upon the casual opera-loving person than these twain. And really the blood mounts to the head of the most cynical critic when a good orchestra, plus a good singer (of the Italian school) combine to do "La Boheme." Never shall I forget the emotion of the opera when I first heard it in my own emotional teens. Nothing "can surpass it ever." The adorable Bohemian quality of the naughtiness! And the fascinating quartette Mimi, Rudolph, Musetta and Marcel. This is a story well fitted to be the foundation for an opera by Puccini. The setting is familiar to him and the romantic aspect of the characters just what he revels in; and how well he does the consumption! There are some arias in "La Boheme" which have been done to death, but it is a really thrilling thing of its kind; a thing to gush over and forget how occupied we are with being superior to Puccini and opera in general. A luscious feast, which, like all luscious feasts, not only appeases the appetite, but satiates as well.

"Mme. Butterfly" made the most instantaneous appeal, and the most widespread of any modern opera by any composer. The theme is one of those about which we can sentimentalize at a moment's notice. The poor little Japanese girl and the white-uniformed naval officer and the cherry blossoms are a setting well calculated to arouse an American audience, and when they are put into a plot just sufficiently spicy to be entertaining without giving the listeners a feeling of culpability, the combination is sure to win. "Those things are done all the time," we say, and look sorrowful but not ashamed. If they were not done, we should look ashamed and not sorrowful; that is the distinction without a difference, in our moral tone. But to go back to Butterfly. Here is an opera literally full of operatic gems. There are no sections or even phrases which lack melody, and the emotionalism throughout is irrepressible. So expressive is the score, and so adequate for the story, that a well-versed critic could almost tell the plot from hearing the music. And the unversed listener can do almost as well. Upon the occasion of a recent performance of the opera in this city I had a demonstration of its expressiveness. During the first entr'acte I powdered my nose in the women's dressing-room.

I make this observation for the sake of the gentleman who wrote me last week of his conviction that I am a man. And suddenly the colored maid heaved an enormous sigh and said to me: "You'd better go back, them mournful sounds is beginning again." I asked her if they struck her as being particularly mournful, and she answered: "Lord! I don't know anything what it's about, but it makes me feel as if I'd lost my best friend." Well, Butterfly had lost her lover, "who was, of course, far from being her best friend. Thus we see the effect of the canny Puccini upon even the untrained ear. That is why he makes so broad an appeal. A child can understand it. And that is why highbrows mile at the name of Puccini. He is too obvious to interest them. Take Richard Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel,' and play it to the subtlest critic on earth, and he will not visualize the theme or any part of its emotion. A love of fine music is scarcely a natural thing; we

STAGE.

Orpheum Feature.

ST. DENIS RETURN.

ON CLAY" AND "COST OF LOVING" HOLD OVER.

the theatrical game, as in any business of life, whatever is doing is worth doing well, anything that is well done suffers nor causes suffering happy repetition. Therefore, thousands who so far have to secure seats to two of the shows that ever came to town welcome the news that "Common Clay" is to run another week the Morosco, and that Kolb and have been persuaded to remain our midst" for seven days more. The Mason is dark this week. The vaudeville bills promise to be well while, the feature being the appearance of Ruth St. Denis and Denishawn dancers at the Orpheum.

Kolb and Dill will begin their week here in "The High Cost of Loving" at the Majestic Theater tonight's performance. Since first appearance at the Majestic the famous comedians have been to capacity audiences; hundreds have been turned away at performance, and the advance of tickets indicates the third will equal in attendance the two weeks of the big fun show. Kolb and Dill have assembled one the best companies ever organized in the West, the members of "investigating committee" being by C. William Kolb, Max Henry Shumer, Julia Blanc C. Van Slyke, while the supporting company includes Lavinia James Liddy and Lorenz Gil-

The second week of "Common Clay" which is proving as great a success in Los Angeles as it did in New York, will start at the Morosco Theater with this afternoon's performance. The story of the writing of "Common Clay" is particularly interesting in that it was a Harvard University prize play, and from this modest beginning the production went forth to win such fame on Broadway as had seldom been accorded a production composed by master minds in the theatrical world.

Bertha Mann, in the local production, gives one of the finest performances of her career in the role of Ellen Neal, made famous by Jane Cowl, while DeWitt Jennings as Mason is winning new laurels for himself. The production is under the direction of Fred J. Butler, and the cast includes Richard Dix, Lillian Elliott, Warner Baxter, Joseph Eggenton, Harry Duffield, Lola May, Sue MacManamy, David Butler, Edith Ryan and Charles

The jubilee matinee will be Sunday afternoon.

The announcement that the headline attraction at the Orpheum beginning tomorrow is Ruth St. Denis, Ted Shawn and the Denishawn dancers has made Los Angeles theatergoers "sit up and take notice." Miss St. Denis has recruited her from local society circles and will offer a new series Indian and Egyptian dances in sumptuous sets and costumes. The coming of this terpsichorean artist, with her big band of trained pupils, gives a sort of finale to the greatest dance in Orpheum history.

Another featured act is that of Harty and Kirk, who offer a bit of charming foolery "On the Shrewsbury." Helen and her lively company will offer a comical sketch called "Bull's Birthday," while Frank and dance, talk and abuse each other—right before the "intelligent audience!" Ethel MacDonough returns after a week's absence with a new line of entertainment. The holdovers are Belle Story, Le and Bosco, and Ben

"The Law That Failed," starring Alma Hanlon, is the feature picture of the Burbank's new photoville program, which starts with today's performance. The story is from the pen of Louis Reeves, and Miss Hanlon is supported by the eminent actor, Edward The vaudeville numbers which follow the picture consist of the following interesting features: Dog Circus, an animal act having a special set of spectacular electrical effects; the Exposition, three young men with unusually fine voices; Blair and in a snappy patter and song Bennet, known as "The Troubadour," who by his remarkable yodling has won his way into the hearts of many audiences; the Great and Company, magicians.

Roundup," a spectacular western feature, is the title of the headline act in which "Arizona Joe" will appear on the new Pantages bill tomorrow. In this offering seven human characters and ten equine beauties will appear. A former Los Angeles stock favorite, Margo Duffet, will be among those present. Miss Duffet appears with Dan Bruce in a comedy skit called "A Corner in Wireless."

Weber, Bock and Frazer will offer a lively interpretation of the latest syncopated airs while Le Hoen and Du Preece are said to have an act as unique as their names. Adler and Arline are declared to be comedy imitators of the first water.

The bill is closed by the showing of the first installment of the Balboa-Pathe serial. "The Neglected Wife," featuring Ruth Roland.

Hippodrome.

The Hippodrome management finds it difficult to pick a headliner from the various sparkling features which start the week at the "Hip" tomorrow. Of special interest to ladies, however, will be Greta Von Beggen, the physical culture girl, who will not only entertain in a most unusual manner but who will deliver a brief though interesting talk on the art of discarding superfluous avoirdupois. Saylor and Brown have a smart patter act called "Little Miss Forget It," and a novelty comedy sketch called "Un-Invited," will be presented by Catherine Chaloner and company. Argo and Virginia are talented singers and harpists while still more music will be offered by the Victoria Trio in "A Lyric Luxury." Anderson and Goines guarantee patrons a good laugh in "The Ghost of a Coon," and the roster is completed by a singing novelty called "Lamont's Western Days."

As usual, good pictures are included.

Composer.

must have intellects in order to appreciate it. And I should not say that Puccini is a big intellect. Of course, he does not have to be, he is so very expert in the things he does. But, observing him closely in a test tube, we find him not a man of intellectual powers.

Few composers are men of broad intellectual powers. The man of talent does not have to think, and he usually makes a very poor showing when he tries to. I mean by that not that he does not use his mind, and work ferociously at times, but that he has as a rule trite philosophical tendencies and little reasoning ability.

Tolstoi was a good example of the man of talent, who, when he tried to think, was often a perfect fool. Tolstoi was a very great artist, but his book on art is gibberish. He had the most preposterous and absurd notions on art of any educated man of his century. He wrote for the people, and the people had no idea what he was driving at. He believed that art was for the plain people, and should be used for their enlightenment and entertainment, and the cultured classes are the only ones who ever read Tolstoi or begin to understand him. As a matter of fact, the plain people are not much concerned with art, and the peasants of Russia mistrust the rich men of the country who would seem to be making things better for them, but are not actually doing so any more than Tolstoi did.

Puccini is a composer without being a man of intellect, which is not, however, to say that he is not shrewd and intelligent. His new opera bespeaks again his prowess for successes.

"La Rondine" (which means the swallow or some other bird of passage) is constructed along the same lines that have proven efficient in the extreme before this. The setting is Paris and the continent, and the characters are a wealthy old man with a young and beautiful "amie" who yearns for real love while finding its counterfeit profitable in the extreme. There comes upon the scene a secondary love affair between her maid and a young poet who frequents her Bohemian evenings, and finally the real lover, the tenor I mean, appears and meets the swallow at a masque ball. The old lover sees them together and casts her off in real basso fashion, and then the tenor writes his father that he wants to marry the soprano. Here enters the "Camille" motif. The father says that he will willingly accept any wife that his son may choose provided she have a pure and unsullied name. That component being the one thing that the soprano does not possess, she makes the great renunciation and gives up the man she loves, as Camille did, for the sake of his father's convictions. Then curtain.

Another atrocious story added to the list of operas. But with Puccini's gifts, the thing will undoubtedly be a great success. So far it has been given only in Monte Carlo, where the people of Europe are seeking what relaxation they can from the arduous business of talking about the war. Anything would divert them in their extremity, and how lucky they are to have a new opera by Signor Puccini, which they would revel in even when things were running smoothly. The score shows all the old familiar earmarks and tricks. The instrumentation is clever and the rhythmic ideas various. The harmonic and contrapuntal schemes are sufficiently modern to give a semblance of originality while clinging to the true Italian style and the Puccini essence. The high emotionalism is there and the dramatic intensity—with the opportunities, as usual, for the voice. The long legato passages and then the climax—true Puccini, all of it. The man is a master at adapting Italian passion to music which makes a universal appeal.

APPLIED HARMONY.
MISS ALCHIN'S BOOK.

Carolyn Alchin is the only woman in the world who is the author of a text-book on harmony. Not only does she deserve praise for the attempt, which would blast the ambition of most of us by the sheer enormity of the task, but she is to be credited with having brought out a very excellent work of the highest quality of musicianship. "Applied Harmony" is the name of the book and it has the distinction of having been published by the author.

Harmony is the most complicated study imaginable. Sanscrit is childishly simple as compared to the most meager study of harmony. Ordinarily it requires a close application and a capacity for concentration of no small order; but for the mastering of Miss Alchin's book the student would better have quite a lively talent, along with the application, for she uses the ear as well as the mind of her pupil. She frankly states that her work is not for the untrained ear. No casual and tone-deaf student could make even a beginning, much less an end, of the book. It is for teachers, and talented ones, too.

Miss Alchin calls her book a "study of relationships," and she manages to make a fascinating occupation of it. I believe it is to be used in some of the schools here and, if successfully used, it will turn out some very capable students. There is no possibility of getting through it without the greatest care and exactitude. Miss Alchin is a severe taskmaster. There is no evading her problems, which, if mastered, will make a very fair composer of the pupil.

There are some points in this book which are new to works on harmony. For example, the use of overtones in the selection of inversions. This method is very satisfactory, and has not, to my knowledge, been given before. Also it makes of rhythmic accents a vital matter. And the use of embellishments from the beginning gives the student a sense of really composing something worth working over rather than a bale of dry stuff which never would be used in composing after the completion of studies. There is, thank heaven, no figured bass. All that can be done to dispose of the hackneyed and dull methods of composition has been done. It takes on the element of delight without losing the seriousness of purpose and intention which every text-book must have.

Miss Alchin's work bears the hearty commendation of a number of the foremost composers and virtuosi of the day and has the appearance of having been printed with the utmost care and regard for details. The excerpts are modern, for the modern student, and are taken from the greatest composers. There are no trite examples used for the purpose of illuminating the writer's meaning. To conclude, the work is comprehensive and unprejudiced—a most desirable foundation for the theorist of today.

Her Hobby.

BUTTERFLY COLLECTOR.

Attractive Star of "Law that Failed" Makes Specialty of Capturing Rare Specimens — Knows Some of Their Latin Names, Too.

Alma Hanlon, the beautiful star of the photoplay, "The Law that Failed," which will be shown for the first time in this city at the Burbank, beginning Monday, spends the moments she can spare away from Red Cross work and posing before the motion-picture camera, in collecting and mounting rare specimens of butterflies. She modestly confesses she is quite expert in the study of butterflies and that she knows a good many of their long Latin names.

Miss Hanlon has been interested in butterflies for some time. When she was a youngster in school, which, of course, wasn't so very long ago, she spent more time in the fields, searching for newer and prettier wings than she spent with her school books. At that time she was also interested in learning to whistle. But she has since been more successful with butterflies than with whistling.

After being caught and chloroformed, the butterflies are mounted in plaques and trays. A great part of the enjoyment of collecting them, declares Miss Hanlon, is in placing them in trays with an eye toward the most successful arrangement, color and design. All of the trays are of different colors and patterns and offer a variety of background for the many specimens in Miss Hanlon's collection.

Miss Hanlon is said to have the best role of her career on the stage or screen in "The Law that Failed." The story hinges on the fact that a man guilty of murder can be acquitted if the body of the murdered person, or any trace of it, is not discovered. Most persons do not know this point of law, and this makes the picture mystifying. The management of the Burbank is to invite the members of the Los Angeles bar to see "The Law that Failed" some day the early part of the week.

HOPE FOR THE FEATURE.

THE unexpected continues to happen in the motion picture world. A year or so ago everybody was saying the day of the big feature would soon be over, yet during the past year there have been more big features shown by ten times than during any previous time in the history of filmland. Even now, in a period of comparative quiet, when the expression that the big feature is done is heard again, they are still very much in evidence, especially on the market.

The big feature has its place in the amusement world, just as any other form of entertainment, and it is not going to be in any hurry to resign that place. There is no doubt about it that the picture of this type has a number of things against it to start with, such as the fact that it is tiring to the eyes to watch a film for a whole evening, but, nevertheless, there are certain stories which can only be told in seven, eight or even ten reels.

Pictures that may be told in ten reels are, of course, a great deal more of a rarity than the producers like to admit. The craze for long features has been such during the past two years, that the film-makers stretched a five-reel picture or a three-reel picture even to a length that strained the action to the breaking point. Such a picture was "War Brides."

Another common fault with the producers of feature films has been to rely entirely on spectacular phases. This has been the fault in half the so-called big pictures shown here this past season. Even Griffith himself became lost in the mazes of the spectacle, that did not have a strong enough story to bear its weight.

After all, the story is the thing. If it is a ten-reel story, let it be a ten-reel picture. If it is a three-reel story, let it be a three-reel picture.

Most of the producers have learned the expensive lesson of the big feature. And a lot of Tom-Dick-and-Harries who undertook to make a ten-reeler immediately after a wild plunge into the film business, now have a few miles of celluloid on their hands, about as valuable as a Bulgarian war bond. Still, all this has aided to simmer down the possibilities of feature-making to a working basis, and anyone who thinks that experience is going to make the producers quit making features is mistaken. But they aren't going to be made without some sort of judgment as to what constitutes a real feature story in the future.

THE HELPING HAND.

"How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

A unique benevolence has been inaugurated at Pittsfield, Mass. Within the next few weeks a camp for crippled children of small means will be opened there and operated by Dr. W. Russell MacAusland of Boston, who has given much attention to such children. A liberal donation has made this camp possible. A farm about five miles outside of Pittsfield has been leased, with a view to eventual purchase if it proves suitable, and a fund of $50,000 has been given for the conduct of the new institution by a benefactor who desires to withhold his name from publicity in connection with the gift.

Abram Light, a farmer near Chambersburg, Pa., had nearly 100 bushels of potatoes that he did not need for his own use. A dealer called at his farm and offered him $2.50 a bushel for them.

"No," replied Light, "you cannot buy them." Continuing, he said:

"I had good crops this year, and now I am going to help those who have not been so fortunate as I have been. I will sell them to my neighbors $2 a bushel, but no more than a bushel to any one.

"I have more than 300 bushels of wheat and a considerable quantity of corn. I will not sell more than 100 bushels of wheat at a time, and then only to a local miller, so that my neighbors may be able to procure food for their families. To those in need of corn I will sell in small quantities, but will not wholesale it."

Free training classes to fit Wisconsin women for war-time emergency service are to be organized at Racine, Wis., under the supervision of the University of Wisconsin extension division. The classes will continue for six weeks. The course consists of two weeks of general lectures and field work, followed by five weeks of specialized instruction in general social, relief, or health work.

With a view to aiding their employees in reducing the cost of living and to aid in the national preparedness movements, the manufacturing plants in the vicinity of Curtis Bay, Maryland, have turned over hundreds of acres of their land holdings to be used gratis as farms by the workmen. The first plant to inaugurate the scheme was the United States Asphalt Refining Company of East Brooklyn. The news of the innovation spread to other plants, and now the Texas Oil Company and the Curtis Bay Chemical Company have turned over large areas of unoccupied land for the free use of their employees, and other plants are planning to follow their example as soon as plans can be completed.

A gift of $70,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation for the maintenance of the school of hygiene and public health of the Johns Hopkins University has been announced. The appropriation will be for the school's fiscal year, which begins July 1.

Money given by the Rockefeller Foundation made the establishment of the school possible. Announcement of the establishment of the school was made by Dr. William H. Welch at the commencement exercises about a year ago, and since that time the Rockefeller Foundation has given about $167,000 for buildings and equipment.

A fellowship in world politics, carrying with it $300, has been established at Stanford University by Misses Mary and Helen Seabury of New Bedford, Mass. The fellowship, as noted by the Palo Alto Times, is to be attached to the department of history, and the appointment of the candidate is to be made by it. The fellowship in its present status is given for the year 1917-18 only. Its purpose is to stimulate study in international understanding and liberal principles in world politics. The work will consist of scientific investigation and contributions on some phase of the general subject, although no specific or definite subjects are set, and no propaganda is to be fostered.

WOULD CUT HIGH COST.

Morosco Actresses are Seeking the Cheapest Food Recipes.

The actresses in the Morosco stock company are doing their "bit" toward helping to solve the high cost of living. Under the direction of Sue MacManamy, the young women are closely studying the ingredients of various recipes to determine the cheapest foods that will offer the most nourishment.

The actresses have found that a close study of market conditions reveals a considerable difference of price in easily-obtained foods. Most of the members of the Morosco company live in apartments and do their own cooking, or have a maid to cook for them. They select, or have their maid select, the cheaper foods, and a study of recipes is made by all the actresses back stage at the Morosco, after rehearsal, and the one by which food may be prepared and rendered rich in food values is chosen.

The recipe worked out this week by the actresses, and its worth and cost, compared with potatoes and round steak, is as follows:

Risotto creole—One cup rice, two tablespoons butter or drippings, two tablespoons chopped onion, one cup of tomato pulp, two teaspoons salt, three cups meat stock or water, one cup grated cheese.

Add rice to plenty of boiling water. Boil five minutes, drain and rinse rice; melt butter in a saucepan, and the onion and rice, and cook until the fat is absorbed; add the tomato pulp, salt, pepper and a dash of cayenne, then add the stock; cover and cook very slowly until the rice is tender; add more water if needed; stir in the cheese, and when melted serve hot.

The following results are obtained:

Risotto creole—Number served, six; cost, 20 cents; total fuel calories, 1430.72; total protein calories, 190.68.

Potatoes and round steak—Number served, six; cost, 40 cents; total fuel calories, 157.4; total protein calories, 453.24.

DIDN'T SAY IT, EITHER.

Little Billy May be Insulted at His Own Language.

There is one spoken title in the Paramount picture, "Unconquered," in which Fannie Ward will be seen at the Alhambra Theater Sunday, which is ascribed to Little Billy Jacobs, but Little Billy has issued emphatic denials of having made such a statement.

The incident in the picture occurs as the little boy takes his cannon and smashes his tin soldiers. His mother picks up one of the broken toys, shows it to Little Billy, and, according to the title, Billy says, "Well, mother, war is hell." But Billy would not say this—Miss Ward, Director Reicher, Hobart Bosworth and the whole company tried to induce him to say it, but he positively refused.

He asserted that his mother told him that hell was a naughty word and he wouldn't say it. They finally compromised by having him say when they were photographing the scene—"War is War." What Billy will say upon seeing the picture on the screen and discovering that the wicked word was put into his mouth by the heartless company is yet to be recorded.

Where orange blossoms are always fair,
And every month is the month of June.
They say in that city of Wonderful Dreams
There's never a heart that is blighted,
And every breeze murmurs of vows that are made
By true lovers' hearts that are plighted.

At last comes the month of June, the culmination of all the other months of the year, for if December means Christmas and April means showers, June means brides and wedding bells, and the happy culmination of dreams and plans. The bouquet of June brides will not be as large this year as last, perhaps, on account of the war carrying away many of the would-be grooms, but enough are remaining to make the parson's schedule very crowded through the whole month.

Dorothy Morphy, the charming sister-in-law of Mrs. E. P. Morphy of Santa Monica, will marry James Friesner some time this month, and pretty Constance Bachelier will become the bride of Paul Gifford within a week or two. Miss Laura Francis Conklin, whose marriage to Charles Curtis of San Diego will be an interesting event, will become a bride tomorrow at St. John's Church. To these and other happy brides-to-be of June their friends are tossing theoretical rice and old shoes as a token of good luck.

To Wed Thursday.

Miss Margaret Locke, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Edward Locke, will become the bride of Sidney Carr Walker of Salina, Kan., Thursday evening at the First Methodist Church, the ceremony to be performed by her father. She has been one of the most feted brides-elect of the season, and it is regretted that the entertaining cannot go on after the marriage, for the young people will make their home at Salina, where Mr. Walker is in business.

Charles Edward Locke, Jr., will give the bride away and Mrs. J. W. F. White and Mrs. W. B. Thompson, sisters of the bride will be matrons of honor, and the following young ladies will be the bridesmaids: Miss Frances Graham, Miss Dorothy Canaga, Miss Jane Thompson and Mrs. Ralph Whittaker. The groom will be attended by Bradford Melvin of San Francisco as best man and will have as groomsmen Alfred Gregory of Sacramento, John Locke Coates, John H. Harrigan of this city and Dr. W. B. Thompson of San Francisco. Little Marion Marks will be the flower girl.

Early June Bride.

Mrs. Howard William Reynolds has the distinction of being one of the first of the June brides, for she was married last Friday at the Immanuel Presbyterian Church, with Rev. Herbert Booth Smith officiant. The bride was formerly Miss Silence McVay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. McVay, of No. 1190 West Twenty-ninth street. The groom is the son of Mrs. Claribel Reynolds and is from New York City.

The bride was gowned in white tulle over silver cloth, with a veil bound with a silver band and falling to the length of the train. A bridal bouquet of white orchids completed her costume. She was attended by her sister, Miss Laura McVay, who was attired in shell pink silk and pink tulle, and Miss Ellen Andrews, who was also maid of honor, wore a gown of deeper pink and both carried cyclamen in varying shades of pink.

The groom was attended by Harold Paulin as best man, and the ushers included Simpson Sinsabaugh, Nelson Douglas, George Grimm and John Widenam. Mrs. McVay, mother of the bride, was attractively gowned in white satin and Mrs. Harold Paulin, sister of the bride, wore light blue. The church was decorated with pink and white flowers and bunches of tall ferns.

The couple left immediately after the ceremony for a two weeks' honeymoon, which will be spent in camping and fishing. Upon their return they will be at home at La Cresta Court, Hollywood.

War Changes Wedding Date.

Miss Dorothy Campbell Fish, daughter of Mrs. Farnum T. Fish of No. 1910 West Sixth street, had set the date of her marriage to Dr. William John Kerr, for the early fall. Owing, however, to war's exigencies, the groom-to-be is subject to call as a member of the Medical Reserve Corps, so the wedding will take place the 19th inst., at the West Adams Presbyterian Church. Dr. Ezra Fish, brother of the bride-elect, is now in France.

Mrs. William Benbow Thompson, nee Ruth Locke, will be the matron of honor and Miss Emma Gates, the maid of honor. Dr. John Rehsisch of San Francisco will be best man.

To Become Sunday Bride.

A home wedding will be solemnized this evening at 6:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, when Miss Sara Hellman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Hellman, becomes the bride of Myrt T. Blum of San Francisco.

The bride will be attended by her sister, Mrs. Florine Wolfstein, and by Mrs. Max Frederick, as matrons of honor. Mrs. Frederick was formerly Miss Rose Hoffman of Los Angeles and is now living in San Francisco. The bridesmaids will be the Misses Juliette Guggenheim, Doris Myer, Ruth Goldsmith, Helen Germain, Dorothy Lazarus of Los Angeles and Felice Anchell of San Francisco. The groom will be attended by the bride's brother, Will Hellman, and the ushers, all of whom are from San Francisco, will be Dave Zellerbach, Dan Aranson, Merbin Wangenheim, Harry Levy, Louis Lurie and Howard Sheenan. Little James Henry Wolfstein will be the ring bearer.

Miss Benner to Wed.

Miss Leona Margaret Benner, the daughter of Mrs. Katherine Benner, will become the bride of Theodore W. Brotherton at the Brotherton residence in Hollywood Tuesday morning. The bride will be attired very simply in a white suit and will carry a small bonquet of Cecile Brunner roses. A wedding breakfast will follow the ceremony, and the couple will leave immediately for a honeymoon trip by auto to San Diego and then north to Lake Tahoe. They will be at home to their friends after July 1 at No. 1802 Winona boulevard.

Miss Benner is a graduate of La Salle Seminary and the Powers School of Boston, and the groom-to-be is a graduate of Stanford.

To Wed in Garden.

Miss Phila Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Miller, will wed Donald O'Melveney in the lovely garden of the Miller residence in Pasadena. The wedding will take place the 20th inst., and will be one of the social events of the season.

Plans Church Wedding.

One of the prettiest of the June weddings will be that of Miss Clara Leonardt and Felix McGinnis at 11 o'clock next Wednesday morning at St. Vincent's. Father MacRobert will officiate.

Mrs. Frank Powell will be the maid of honor and the groom will be attended by his brother, John McGinnis. The ushers will include Frank Powell, Edward Maier, Charles Bergin, Carlton Burke, Maynard McFie and George Lichtenberger. Little Lauram Lisk will be the flower girl.

A wedding breakfast at the Leonardt home will follow the ceremony and the couple will leave for a wedding trip through Canada, which will keep them away during the summer months. They will be at home to their friends after September 1 at No. 2523 Eighth avenue.

Entertains for Bride-elect.

Mrs. Eric Barclay of No. 2933 South Normandie avenue will entertain informally for Miss Eloise Filbert, who will become the bride of Lee K. Vermille, an attorney of this city, July 1. Mrs. Barclay will go to her summer cottage at Manhattan Beach tomorrow and Friday a bevy of girl friends are to motor down. Most of them are sorority sisters of the bride-elect. A cafeteria luncheon will be served by the hostess and the afternoon will be spent in sewing dainty things for the honoree.

Will Wed at St. John's.

Of paramount interest socially will be the marriage of Miss Eleanor Banning, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hancock Banning, and John C. MacFarland, next Wednesday at St. John's. The bride will be attended by Miss Marian Fitzhugh as maid of honor and by her cousins, Miss Katherine Banning and Miss Anne Patton, as bridesmaids. Little Miss Eleanor Waites will be the flower girl. The groomsmen will include Morgan Adams, who will be in town just long enough to assist at the wedding of his college friend, John Elliott, Alfred Salisbury, Arvin Brown and Timothy H. Brown.

Berry-Boyd Wedding.

Miss Harriett Pearl Berry, daughter of Mrs. Angie Berry of No. 224 South Kingsley drive, will become of bride of Walter Harrison Boyd, the son of Mr. and Mrs. George Boyd of Turlock, tomorrow evening, at 8:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's mother. About 100 guests have been invited to witness the ceremony, which will be performed by Rev. C. C. Pierce. Mrs. Robert G. Holton will be the matron of honor and the groom will be attended by his brother, George H. Boyd.

Following the ceremony the two will leave for a fortnight's honeymoon by auto, after which they will return to make their home here.

Miss Berry is a graduate of Girls Collegiate and is popular in the younger set. She is the niece of Henry Berry, owner of the San Francisco baseball team, and of Clarence Berry, termed the "Klondyke King." Many relatives from San Francisco have arrived here to be present at the wedding.

Plan Patriotic Ball.

Apparently a military ball was the one function necessary, socially, among the myriad of patriotic activities to balance the whole, and Los Angeles and Pasadena society has agreed that the ball to be given by the Seventh Regiment Band at the Shrine Auditorium next Saturday night is to be a noteworthy affair.

The enlisted men who have been busy as a Committee of Arrangements have found themselves favored on every side. And it is an enlisted men's affair. Beyond giving consent Col. Hutchins and Adjt. Harry June brides.

Miss Leonardt is one of the most popular of the brides-elect. Her marriage to Felix S. McGinnis will take place Wednesday. Miss Banning, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hancock Banning, will wed John MacFarland at St. John's Church Wednesday. Miss Locke is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Edward Locke, and will marry Sidney Carr Walker Thursday evening. Miss Clendennon will become the bride of Harry Waldron Michael the latter part of this month. Mrs. Reynolds was formerly Miss Silence McVay. Her marriage took place Friday. Miss Beuner will marry Theodore W. Brotherton, Jr., the latter part of this month. Miss Miller's wedding to Donald O'Melveny will be an event of June 20.

SOCIETY.

E. Kunkel have left all details to the enlisted personnel.

And the men are now enthusiastic because of the success, socially, that promises to attend their efforts. Particularly are they appreciative of the co-operation of the already overworked society and club women, who are gladly lending their patronage.

Mme. Hesse Sprotte, well known in grand opera, and Miss Violet Romer, dramatic dancer, have both consented to enhance an interesting programme. Mrs. Anita M. Baldwin, in whose honor the ball is given, has composed a march which will be the grand march of the evening. The dance music will in itself be an attraction, as it will be the first time Los Angeles has heard its own military band. Attractive souvenir programmes are to be given away; the dance cards will be exceptional.

The Red Cross and Red Star are both supporting the military ball. Capt. Kunkel, on behalf of his men, has informed both the Red Cross and the Red Star that they are to share in the funds of the dance.

But it is the social success of the evening that the soldiers crave for what may be their farewell ball, and among the many well-known women gladly assisting them are Mrs. Henry E. Huntington, Mrs. Hancock Banning, Mrs. William May Garland, Mrs. Robert Wankowski, Mrs. Seward Simons, Mrs. Oscar Trippett, Mrs. B. F. Bledsoe, Mrs. Earl V. Armstrong, Mrs. Howard Huntington, Mrs. John I. Cravens, Mrs. Albert Sherman Hoyt, Mrs. Charles H. Orisk, Mrs. D. A. Hamburger, Mrs. Harry E. Andrews, Mrs. Harry Chandler, Mrs. H. T. Gage, Mrs. Secondo Guasti, Mrs. Robert Marsh, Mrs. Motley Flint, Mrs. Willis Booth, Mrs. Isadore Dockweiler, Miss Lucretia del Valle, Mrs. Edwin T. Earl, Mme. Ellen Beach Yaw, Mrs. O. P. Clark, Mrs. Chester C. Ashley, Mrs. Lloyd W. Harmon and Mrs. Henry Newby.

For Daughter's Birthday.

Mrs. A. K. Braner entertained with a dancing party at her home, No. 2139 West Twenty-first street, Friday evening in honor of her daughter, Ruth's sixteenth birthday. A delicate and effective color scheme of yellow and white was carried out in the floral decorations and on the hand-painted programmes decorated with coreopsis and Shasta daisies. The hostess was assisted in receiving by her daughter, Miss Irene Brauer, and by Miss Catherine Cartwright. The guests were Misses Margaret Pierce, Gertrude Frese, Eleanor Griffin, Adelaide Bundy, Katherine Thomas, Beatrice Broughton, Dorothy Baker, Wilmer Atkinson, Letitia Rees, Alma Barmann, Edna Schneider, Bertie Strawsen, Ruth Kilian, Anna Eagen, Katherine Beynon, Marjerie Howland, Caroline Hayes and Kathleen McDonald, and Messrs. Wilfred Kirby, Armory Eckley, Edwin Brent, George Bradbury, Howard Wilson, Bill Wilson, Fred Wilson, Alfred Bowles, Bob Griffis, Walle Miller, Frank Wishon, Fullmer Hines, Percy Jones, Kenneth Lynch, Jack Hammer, Aten Lee Lytell, Fred Pierce, Douglas Wright, Lisgard Grier, Edward Burrall, Byron Cole, Friend Cole and Arthur Squires.

School Gives at Home.

The pupils of the Hylward School for Girls were at home to their mothers and friends, Tuesday, from 11 o'clock in the morning until 1 o'clock in the afternoon, at No. 5248 Meridian street. An interesting programme was given by the pupils, including a playground drill and an exhibition of work done during the year. Refreshments were served at noon. Several interesting events have been planned for the future, among which are the closing picnic of all departments on the 29th inst., a musical recital the 30th and the opening of the summer school, July 9.

Farewell Dinner Party.

Mrs. George R. Blackburn of Cleveland, O., who has been spending the winter at the Trinity Hotel, gave a dinner party Monday evening to say good-by to a few of her many friends here. The dinner was given at the Lankershim and was an elaborate affair of six courses. Sweet peas decorated the table and corsage bouquets of the same blossoms were given as favors. Going-away place cards marked the seats of the guests. Following the dinner the party escorted Mrs. Blackburn to her train. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Getz, Mr. and Mrs. LeRoy Hole, Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Goode, Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Freeman, Mr. and Mrs. Beale, Mr. and Mrs. B. K. Galbraith, Miss Josephine Grijava, Miss Irene Martin and Miss Betty Berry.

Queen Esther Circle Entertains.

The members of the Queen Esther Circle of the First Methodist Church recently entertained the members of the Home Missionary Society at the home of Mrs. H. S. Coates on Salino avenue. An enjoyable programme was a feature of the evening and later dainty refreshments were served.

Birthday Remembered.

At a recent meeting of the all-day work department of the Temple Baptist Church the deaconesses presented Mrs. S. W. Gillett with a beautiful birthday cake. Indeed, the meeting took quite the air of a birthday celebration and Mrs. Neeland, chairman of the deaconesses, expressed the feeling of all in telling of the splendid work done by Mrs. Gillett as president of the church work department. Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher, the pastor, presented Mrs. Gillett with a Temple pin, the gift of the 100 women of the work department. A well appointed luncheon was served and Dr. Winbigler gave an address on "Food, and How to Eat."

Chapter Entertained.

Mrs. W. A. Driscoll of Owensmouth recently entertained Chapter "C" of the Los Angeles P.E.O. at her beautiful home on Sherman way. A dainty luncheon was served on the large porch, covers being laid for the following ladies: Mmes. Henderson, Whiney, Warner, Walters, Whittington, Hill and Bathrick and Misses Whiney, Clark, Noble, Quick, Backstrand, Chute and Greef.

Sew for Soldiers.

A very pleasant affair was the patriotic party given Tuesday by Mrs. Clinton A. Griggs, of Anaheim, at her home on South Los Angeles street. The afternoon was spent in sewing for the soldiers. Later, appetizing refreshments were served, the guests's places being marked by small hand-painted statues of Liberty.

Toasts were given to Mrs. Robertson, the retiring president, and to the new president, Mrs. Griggs. The guests were: Mmes. V. Loly, E. Austin, F. Kern, J. Slingsby, H. Tuffee, H. L. McClellan, Kohl Robertson and W. Key and Miss Nina McClellan.

Writer Entertains.

Nicholas Dunaew, the well-known Russian writer and actor, recently gave a birthday dinner party for his friends at his Hollywood bungalow, No. 1150 Las Palmas avenue. Those present included Miss Renee Barker and Miss Nina Byron; James Young, Carlos Bravo, Paul H. Conlon, Dr. James Sternberg and Father James Mythen.

A brilliant reading of Mr. Dunaew's latest Russian tragedy, "The Spider," was given last week by Douglas Gerrard.

Marry at Club.

A pretty wedding took place Thursday evening at the Union League Club, at Second and Hill streets, when Miss Lola May Salkey became the bride of Harry J. Delmer of San Francisco. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Salkey of No. 1814 South Berendo avenue and has had many charming affairs given in her honor. She was simply gowned in white taffeta silk with a veil caught with a wreath of mock orange blossoms, which her mother had worn at her wedding, and she carried a beautiful bouquet of bride's roses. She was attended by her sister, Miss Dorothy Salkey, and by Miss Birdie Jacobs as bridesmaids. They were both attired in pink and carried roses of the same shade. The groomsmen were Albert Goldenson and Irwin Fogel.

The bridal party stood under an archway made of pink carnations, roses and ferns. Dr. E. Magnin performed the ceremony. About eighty-five guests were present. An elaborate wedding dinner followed and afterward Mr. and Mrs. Delmer left for San Francisco, where they will make their home.

Honors Bride-elect.

Mrs. John L. Pomeroy of the Stratford apartments entertained Friday afternoon with a luncheon and theater party in honor of Miss Leona Margaret Benner, who will become a bride Tuesday morning. The luncheon was given at the Stratford apartments and the table was charming with its decorations of sweet peas and tulle. Covers were laid for Miss Leona Benner, Mrs. Beame Tanner, Mrs. Ben Schutt, Mrs. Clarence Hopkins, Mrs. John Sweeney and the hostess. Later Mrs. Pomeroy entertained her guests at a box party at the Orpheum.

Entertains Miss Bacheller.

Miss Constance Bacheller, who will soon be married to Paul Gifford of Boston, was delightfully entertained with a luncheon and shower Friday afternoon by Miss M. Claire Mollison of No. 2729 West Ninth street. After the theater the guests drove to the home of the hostess, where refreshments were served from a table decorated with pink flowers. A large pink ball suspended from the chandelier contained the gifts, which fell in a shower when the bride-elect pulled the ribbons attached. The favors were hand-painted flower pots filled with pink sweet peas. The place cards were suggestive of a wedding trip. The guests included Miss Constance Bacheller, Mrs. Carl Bilsted, Mrs. Eugene Bernard, Miss Cora Kennie, Mrs. Dot Gifford and Miss Laura Hale.

Seniors Make Trip.

The senior class of the Westlake School for Girls included among their many social affairs of the season a delightful trip to Arrowhead Springs. They spent the entire week-end at the mountain resort, having motored there from the city. In the party were the Misses Margaret B. McGrath, Margaret Long, Ellen Weber, Ruth Parker, Frances Murphy, Miss Leckey, Miss Schneider, Loutta Roberts, Vellan Funk, Herbena Haseltine, Elaine Haseltine, Vera Field, Louise Kehrberg, Isabel Fulton, Nell Petit, Georgette Fuller, Charlotte Riddel, Marrion Joplin and Helen Walsh.

Surprise Wedding.

Stealing a march on their friends in the city, Miss Futh Naomi Teitsworth and Joseph George Wagner motored to San Diego Thursday and were married. Their engagement was announced some time ago, but it was thought the wedding would take place in the fall. A few friends accompanied them in the automobile and Mr. and Mrs. Field Carmichael acted respectively as best man and matron of honor.

The bride is the daughter of William E. Teitsworth of No. 954 Fedora street.

Mr. and Mrs. Wagner will make their home in this city.

For Mrs. Hole.

The board of managers of the Y.W.C.A. gave a luncheon at the Clark home on Loma drive yesterday noon in honor of Mrs. Willits J. Hole, retiring president of the Y.W.C.A. The table decorations were spring flowers, and a beautiful flower basket was presented to Mrs. Hole. Peeping out from the blossoms was a note addressed to the honoree, in which the members of the board expressed their appreciation of the splendid work of Mrs. Hole during the five years she has labored for the Y.W.C.A.

Mr. Kerchkoff at Arrowhead.

William G. Kerchkoff has been at Arrowhead Springs for several days, taking the mineral baths.

Bride-elect Showered.

Miss Evelyn Kinder entertained Tuesday afternoon at the home of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George D. Watson, No. 1707 Third avenue, with a miscellaneous shower for Miss Fannie Wallein, bride-elect of Prof. Leslie F. Gay of the University of Southern California.

Miss Wallein is a graduate of Pomona College, and very popular with the college set. Prof. Gay is an alumnus of the local university and holds the chair of history.

The guests included relatives of Miss Wallein and former pupils of Prof. Gay.

From the North.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Wisdom of San Francisco arrived in Los Angeles Thursday and are guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wisdom, who entertained for them Thursday evening with a dinner party and on Friday evening with a dance.

In the Mountains.

Mrs. Frank Busch is spending a week at Arrowhead Springs, having gone there to join her husband, who is making a lengthy sojourn at the mountain spa.

Visitor from Coronado.

Mrs. Daik Henderson of Coronado strand is up from the southern social center to spend a few days in this city and is stopping at the Hotel Clark.

Plan Vacation.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry Owen Eversole, with their two sons, are planning to spend their vacation at Pine Hills Lodge this season.

Returns from San Francisco.

Mrs. S. Grant Goncher has returned home from San Francisco, where she was called on account of the illness and death of her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth H. Coe.

Honor Miss Locke.

The Misses Florence and Charlene Woodhead entertained with a tea at the Bryson Thursday afternoon in honor of Miss Margaret Locke. Forty girl friends were present, including many U.S.C. and Stanford sorority sisters of the bride-elect. The dining-room was decorated with the Stanford colors, carried out with red carnations and fuschias. The reception-room was beautified with pink carnations and Cecile Brunner roses, and the back parlor was filled with spring blossoms. The winsome honoree wore a gown of soft blue satin with a border of pastel lace.

A musical programme in the ballroom was a feature of the evening, and consisted of several vocal solos by Mrs. E. L. Gallentine, Mrs. Brownrig and Miss Helene Jackson. Miss Charlene Woodhead gave two appreciated dramatic readings.

Announce Daughter's Engagement.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Pudlin of No. 4383 Camero avenue announce the engagement of their daughter Reba to William E. Phillips of Chicago, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Phillips of this city.

From Sketching Trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Wachtel have just returned from one of their sketching trips in the Temecula Canyon country. Mrs. Watchtel will spend some time at Pine Hills later in the season.

Entertain for Bride.

Miss Mary Reed and Miss Marguerite Reed entertained Tuesday with a picnic and luncheon in Sycamore Grove for Mrs. Chester Chapman, a recent bride. The party was chaperoned by Mrs. Hodges, mother of the bride, and Mrs. Woodhead, the bride's aunt. In the party were Mmes. Walter E. Overell, F. A. Junquist, Samuel del Valle, Frank Boettcher, Feinburg, Collier Wasley, William Freeman, Vincent Morgan, Frank Burman, M. N. Miller, Hopkins, Carrie Peck, Campbell, Thomas P. White, C. Hickman and C. W. Cussman, and the Misses Cora Boettcher, Lela Bobin, Wilhelmina Rector, Marguerite Humel, Lucy Hummond, Grace Peaen, Evelyn Roper, Madeline Roper, Madeline Miller, Florence Danforth, Dorothy Woodhead, Annabeth Woodhead, Pearl Kardell, Agnes Weber, Betty

SOCIETY.

Fownes, Helen Mikusell, Lois Watner and Leona Fusenot.

Give Musicale and Tea.

Mrs. D. A. Schweitzer and Mrs. R. L. Bowen entertained with a musical and tea Thursday afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock at the residence of Mrs. R. D. Weaver of No. 2214 Virginia road. The affair was given for the organ fund at the Church of the Messiah, and between sixty and seventy guests were present. The programme consisted of a trio by Mrs. J. Moyse, Mrs. C. A. Post and Miss Carolyn Maude Gilbert, accompanied by Mrs. W. R. Tanner; piano numbers by Mrs. Carlotta Comer Wagner, a whistling solo by Miss Mildred Shannon, a group of vocal selections by Miss Thelma Robbins, and a solo by Rev. Howard D. French, accompanied by Miss Robbins. Refreshments were served later in the afternoon.

Mrs. Barman at Arrowhead.

Mrs. Fred Barman is domiciled at Arrowhead Springs, intending to remain there for a fortnight.

Wed at Santa Barbara.

Miss Ruth Dressiar of Seattle and Harry E. Reddick of Ventura were married at Santa Barbara May 24, the Rev. A. F. Stem of Ventura officiating. Mr. Reddick is a civil engineer connected with the office of the Ventura County Surveyor. Mr. and Mrs. Reddick will be at home at Santa Susanna for the next few months.

Bridge.

Mrs. Cordelia Parker entertained with three tables of auction bridge last Monday in honor of Mrs. Strachan Barret, who will soon return to her home in Kentucky after a delightful visit in Hollywood.

Off for the East.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Kennedy left yesterday for the East. They will spend most of the summer in New York and vicinity, their home having been there for many years. Their sons, Donald and William, Jr., who are in Hollywood High School, will join them soon.

To New York.

Miss E. H. Terrill and Miss Grace Campbell have left for New York. They will return about the middle of October.

At Mountain Spa.

A sojourn is being enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Christopher at Arrowhead Springs, where they go frequently for health and rest.

Dance Schedule Changed.

The buffet dances at the Alexandria, which have been conducted with success, will for the summer months be held only on Monday nights instead of Mondays and Thursdays, as heretofore. The same orchestra will remain through the summer, and special features will be introduced from time to time. Many hostesses have found the buffet dances a simple and pleasant way of paying social debts, and members of theater parties have a habit of making for the dance after the play.

Los Angeles Boys Graduate.

Among the graduates of the San Diego Army and Navy Academy this week are William Edgar Thorne and Charles Hurd Head, Los Angeles boys, who have made unusually fine records in scholastic work and athletic attainments. The graduation schedule at the school at Pacific Beach includes a banquet, which was given for the senior and junior classes by Capt. and Mrs. Thomas A. Davis Friday evening, and a baccalaureate sermon today. Wednesday evening a reception and dance will be given by the senior class at the Woman's Club House at Pacific Beach, and Thursday a series of competitive drills will be conducted on the academy campus under the supervision of Lieut. Cyrus R. Street, U.S.A., commandant of cadets. Friday there will be a final battalion review and the closing exercises at the clubhouse. Prizes and diplomas will be awarded by Supt. Davis. Those to whom diplomas will be awarded are Ronald Kennison de Ford, Arthur Joseph Bruce, Sibley Sellew, Solomon Aaron Stolaroff, Fred Priday Curtis, Charles Hurd Head, William Edgar Thorne and James Randolph Frantz. The lowering of the flag at noon will close the exercises.

Give Surprise Shower.

The members of Sigma Phi Sigma Sorority gave a miscellaneous shower Thursday evening as a surprise to Miss Charlotte Shumate, a sorority sister and a bride-elect. The girls drove to the Shumate residence in the evening, taking with them decorations, gifts and refreshments. The evening was spent with music and games. Present were Misses Mildred and Dorothy Davidson, Annabelle Wishard, Yvette and Junette Gilmore, Madlyn O'Kelly, Dorothy Paul, Madeline Dolfinger, Winifred Erdman, Margaret McNichols, Jean McNaughton, Maude Hughes, Myrtle Smith and Ellinor Paul, Mrs. Clarence Bassett and Mrs. Nolen Allen.

Miss Shumate is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman T. Shumate and is to marry Curry Norton of Pomona in August.

Mrs. Kayser Entertains.

Mrs. Elizabeth Kayser of the Witmer apartments entertained Thursday evening in honor of her niece, Mrs. A. A. Dyer of Galveston, Tex., and Mrs. Bess Clingen of Chicago, who returned to her home yesterday. The rooms were decorated with pink sweet peas and carnations. The hostess was assisted in receiving by Mmes. Bess Clingen, C. P. Lott, Eletta Meyer, W. P. Marvin and Vonderleith. About forty guests were present.

Celebrate Pearl Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Burns of Santa Ana were entertained by their children and friends the past week in honor of their thirtieth wedding anniversary.

They were invited to the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Head for dinner, and afterward the party drove to the Burns residence, which had been entered in the meantime by friendly invaders, who had decorated with ropes of fern and had hung white wedding bells from the ropes of greenery. White carnations and roses were used in abundance. Rev. Harcourt W. Peck performed a mock ceremony, at the close of which he presented the honored couple with a set of pearl-handled knives and forks, a gift from the fifty guests present.

Wedding at Home.

A pretty wedding of recent date was that of Miss Thelma Sylvania Stanton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Stanton of Eagle Rock City, and Lucius A. Sweatt of Redondo Beach. The marriage took place at the home of the bride's parents, Rev. Wolfred Evans of Newhall officiating. Mrs. A. T. Adams played the wedding march. The tiny sister of the bride, Eloise Ellen Stanton, was the ring bearer and escorted the pair to the altar. Miss Marguerite Hauber of La Crescenta was the maid of honor. The rooms were veritable bowers of posies and the bride was beautifully gowned in white silk and lace. The veil was held in place with orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of Cecile Brunner roses, while the maid of honor carried sweet peas.

Mr. Sweatt is in the employ of the Southern Pacific and stationed at present at Wabuska, Nev., where the newlyweds will probably make their home. The young couple left on an "unknown journey" immediately following the ceremony, and, after the 10th inst., will be at home with the bride's parents.

Benefit Card Party.

A card party for the benefit of the sewing circle of Juvenile Hall will be given at the Bryson apartments Thursday afternoon. There will be bridge, five hundred and tea, and the well-known tenor, Harold Proctor, will sing. Mrs. George H. Kress will be one of the hostesses.

In New York.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Jaffa, who left here a few weeks ago, are in New York and are registered at the Hotel McAlpin.

At the Beaches.

Residents of this city are visiting the various seaside resorts in increasing numbers and many Angelenos have arrived at Del Monte the past week, including Mrs. George D. Rowan, Miss Florence Rowan, Mrs. F. B. Cook, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Grau, Mary L. Hutchins, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Newmark, Josephine Goldschmidt, Mrs. F. X. Ewing, Benjamin Sepulveda and Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Tyler.

Entertains Bridal Party.

Miss Clara Schafer, whose marriage to Oscar Shock will take place the 19th inst. at the Boyle Heights Presbyterian Church, entertained her bridal party yesterday evening with a beautifully appointed dinner.

The table was decorated with a gilded basket of pink and white sweet peas, from which streamers of pink ribbon extended to tiny cupids at each place. The hand-painted place cards were tinted with the same delicate shade of pink as the blossoms.

Miss Shafer is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Shafer of No. 113 North Soto street, and is a talented musician. Mr. Shock is connected with the First National Bank of Los Angeles. Miss Elsie Shafer, sister of the bride-elect, will be maid of honor and the Misses Katharine McKelvey and Helen Parsons, the bridesmaids. Little Anna Protheroe will be the flower girl. The groom will be attended by William Stunikle and the ushers will be Albert Gill and John Cook.

Returns from East.

Miss Marie Olivia McCoy, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. John Craig McCoy of No. 445 South Harvard Boulevard, returned yesterday afternoon from a four-month trip to Washington, D. C., Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Kansas City and St. Louis. She has been visiting friends and relatives.

Entertain for Visitor.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Brown of No. 211 East Sixty-first street, assisted by Mrs. A. L. Rader, recently entertained in honor of Mrs. Gertrude Gelb of New York City, who will depart for her eastern home today. She will spend the summer months in New York, but intends to return to Southern California for the winter. Present were Mrs. Gertrude Gelb, Dr. and Mrs. Stanford Whiting, Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Kraus, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Stola, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Graham, Mmes. Alice Sweringare and Doris Guin, the Misses Veta Chener, Vada Harvey, and Yanie Sweingare, and Messrs. John Van Sant, Ed Nillinger, Howard Shaffer, Joseph Rice, Roy Rice, Edward Price, E. Crockett, J. N. Spivens.

OUT-OF-TOWN SOCIETY

Pasadena.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made in Pasadena of the marriage of Robert L. Wheaton of Newark, N. J., son of George F. Wheaton of No. 261 South Mentor avenue, to Miss Dennis J. Richards of Lyndon, Kan. The wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Herrman, Newark, Mrs. Herrman acting at matron of honor. The bride wore a gown of white crepe de meteor and a veil of tulle, fastened with lilies of the valley, and carried a bouquet of sweet peas and lilies of the valley. The matron of honor wore a gown of crepe de chine and carried a bouquet of sweet peas. After the ceremony a wedding supper was served. Later in the evening Mr. and Mrs. Wheaton left for a trip to Atlantic City. They will make their home in Newark.

The Altior Club of the Y.W.C.A. returned Monday from another successful week-end party at Camp Ualtree. Among the women in the party were the Misses Ines Ensign, Bertha Phillips, Dorothy Conner, Hulda Weik, Ethie Coleman, Florence Bartholomew, Amanda Voss, Josephine Patterson and Josephine Giesler.

Mrs. Margaret Fowler of No. 363 Grove avenue gave a luncheon Tuesday to thirty-two guests. Miss Helen Barnes of Australia gave an interesting account of experiences in traveling. Other guests were Mrs. Lon F. Chapin, Miss Dorothy Spinney, Mrs. Clara Bryant Heywood, Miss Anderson, general secretary of the local Y.W.C.A.; Mrs. Hopkins, a recent bride of Los Angeles; Mrs. E. J. Blacker and Mrs. Sticht of Australia and Mrs. Stinchfield, the latter two the guests of honor.

Miss Jessie Allin of No. 906 North Orange Grove avenue entertained last Tuesday evening with an announcement party for Miss Mabel Creiger of Los Angeles, who is to be married the latter part of June to Earl C. Dennison of Los Angeles. The decorations were in pink sweet peas. Musical selections were given by Miss Alice Emig and Miss Marie Ruby. Miss Creiger formerly was a resident of Pasadena and was graduated from the local High School. The guests were Misses Creiger, Marie Ruby, Alice Emig, Lucy Good, Bessie Chamberlain, Mary Belle Pomeroy, Nan Howard, Ruby Johnson, Elsie Jackson and Mrs. John H. Allin.

Miss Hazel A. Thorngren, daughter of Charles O. Thorngren of No. 426 North Vernon avenue, and Edward E. DuNah were married Friday evening at the home of the bride's parents. Rev. Frank Durham, assistant pastor of the First Baptist Church, performed the ceremony. Miss Alice Thorngren, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and Carl DuNah was best man. The young couple have gone on a wedding trip to San Diego and in about one week will be at home at No. 972 Claremont drive.

Mrs. E. D. Neff of Santa Clara and Mendocino avenues, Altadena, gave a dinner and dance Friday evening at the Altadena Country Club in compliment to her son, William. About fifty boys and girls were invited.

Mrs. J. C. Cox was guest of honor at a birthday party given Tuesday evening at the Park Hotel. Covers were laid for twenty-two people. The decorations were in pink and white. Immediately after luncheon the company motored to the new park in the Arroyo Seco, above Devil's Gate, where the afternoon was spent pleasantly out of doors. Among the members of the party were Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Warden, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bevill, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Newman, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Salsgiver, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Cox and the Misses Myrtle J. Hamilton, Emfly Griffin and Katherine France, Mrs. Annie M. Newman, Mrs. Lillie E. Hamilton, Mrs. A. Greenwood, Mrs. Mary R. Young and Master Robert Newman.

South Pasadena.

INFORMAL was the dinner-dance given on Friday evening by Miss Irene Salisbury of Marengo avenue. An abundance of seasonal blooms were used in decoration. The guests included Misses Louise MacDonald, Lucille Council, Adelaide Dow, Tillie Bauer, Geraldine Frick; Messrs. Mason, Jackson Fisk, Newton Cattern, Bruce Rogers and Henry Weatherby.

Mrs. Robert A. Thompson of No. 812 Brent avenue entertained Saturday with an evening of bridge.

William Warde Fowler and Eleanor Gutzler are South Pasadena members of the Occidental College graduating class which will have its commencement on Tuesday. Numerous affairs during the past fortnight have made the period busy for the local Occidentalites.

Mr. and Mrs. Julian Adams of Fletcher avenue will entertain a group of children tomorrow afternoon, the occasion being the sixth birthday anniversary of their son, Wilton Adams.

Wednesday evening Miss Miriam Bragonier of No. 1735 Oxley street was hostess at a young folks' taffy pull. Her guests were Misses Rachel Stillwell, Elizabeth Wision, Em-

ALUM WATER DARKENS GRAY OR FADED HAIR.

Simple, easy to use and gives quick, perfect, lasting results. Leaves the scalp clean, the hair odorless, clean, fluffy and glossy, and restores the original color in shades of either light, medium or dark brown, or in blonde shades. Dissolve one bottle of ovelo powder in two ounces of water, moisten the hair with the solution, and while damp, rinse the hair in alum water (two teaspoons powdered alum to one quart,) then rinse in plain water, they dry the hair. That is all. It acts like magic. You can have your hair beautifully natural for the balance of life. Ovelo powder solution is inert and strictly harmless—a child can drink it. Ovelo powder is sold at drug stores.

CORSETS AT NEW PRICES

OWING to further and greater advances in the cost of all corset materials, and—

OWING to the fact that it may soon become very difficult to secure certain materials of the Nemo Standard of quality at any price; and—

OWING to our determination that the Nemo quality shall never deteriorate—

WE RELUCTANTLY GIVE ADVANCE NOTICE of an increase in retail prices of certain Nemo models, to be in effect

On and After Monday, July 2

SELF-REDUCING—Nos. 300, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 324, 326 and 344 Retail price now $3.75—will be advanced to $4.25

SELF-REDUCING—Nos. 506, 508, 522 and 523 Retail price now $5.00—will be advanced to $6.00

These advances affect only the few models named; but, as still higher prices for materials are inevitable, we may be compelled in the near future to increase prices on all Nemo Corsets.

We therefore suggest that it will be true economy to secure a liberal supply while present low prices prevail.

Miramonte.

COUNCILWOMAN ESTELLE LAWTON LINDSEY addressed the Parent-Teacher Association Friday afternoon at the school auditorium. Miss Vivian Clark, director of the school orchestra, sang several selections, and the installation of the new officers closed the interesting programme, which brought out a large attendance.

Mrs. J. A. Crevelin, president of the West Side Ebell Club, spoke at the Mothers' Club at Slauson, when a miscellaneous shower was given Mrs. A. E. Rogers.

Mrs. J. Lair of East Sixty-first street entertained the Merry Sixteen Embroidery Club at the last meeting.

Dancing will be included in the entertainment given by the Mothers' Club at Loma Hall next Thursday, and will follow the programme of instrumental and vocal music. Mrs. Joseph Ayers is to be hostess.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Marchard of Bakersfield are house guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Cooley at their home, No. 1455 Orchard place.

Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Ballish of Makee avenue have as house guest Mrs. O. T. Bain of Cleveland, O.

Mrs. M. O. Wamsley of Miramonte boulevard spent last week with her mother, Mrs. E. T. Eager, in Inglewood.

Rialto.

UNDER the auspices of the Lincoln Club, whose president is W. D. Hoover, Memorial Day was observed with a parade of members of the club and school children from all grades of the local school. Forming at the Methodist Episcopal Church, where each child was given a bouquet, they marched to the Park Cemetery, led by Mrs. Jennie Fadden, color bearer, and Masters Schuyler, Montgomery, in soldier's costume, and Hal MacRae as a navy boy. After decorating the graves of the fallen comrades, a splendid programme followed in which the school children contributed excellent numbers.

Mrs. Robert J. Gray was the hostess at a delightfully informal thimble party Friday afternoon last, when she entertained as a farewell compliment to Mrs. J. McCoig, of Walkerville, Can., who has been the houseguest of Mr. and Mrs. Gray for several months. The guests included neighbors and a collation was served.

In celebration of her birthday anniversary, Miss Mary Oleweiler, entertained with a jolly theater party and supper Tuesday evening. Misses Lettie Rerrick, Esther Reynard, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Bemis, Fred Flint and Will Trapp were the guests. Douglas Fairbanks, "In Again, Out Again," at the Opera House, was enjoyed, after which the party motored to the honoree's home where supper was served. Mrs. Oleweiler was assisted by Miss Bess Culler. A ukulele and pretty silver ladle were among the gifts presented the guest of honor.

Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Harris were guests at a family reunion at the home of the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Sedgwick of Pomona, Sunday. The affair was given as a farewell to Ralph Sedgwick, who will leave soon to become an army truck driver.

Those from San Bernardino and Rialto who make up the Young Married Ladies' Embroidery Club were entertained at the home of Mrs. D. A. Bridges, Mrs. Earl Needham and Mrs. Bridges being the hostesses. An artistic combination of bright red geraniums, Shasta daisies and greenery made the guest-room festive and the same color motif predominated at the repast. A flower contest was arranged for entertainment, the trophy being a pretty Haviland pitcher.

Rev. and Mrs. Stacey A. Smith have purchased the L. M. Harris home on Date street. Rev. Smith was pastor for several years of the local Methodist Episcopal Church. Mrs. Smith left Thursday for a summer's visit with relatives in the East.

Mr. and Mrs. Leland Rausch are the guests of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Rausch.

Mrs. Ena Mort of Palo Alto is the guest of relatives and friends for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Frisbie had as guests last week, Mr. and Mrs. N. B. Frisbie, who were returning from an eastern motor trip to their home at Redding.

Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Pickett have as guest, their daughter, Mrs. Roy Weaver, husband and son.

Edward T. Mathes of Bellingham, Wash., en route to the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Dallas, Tex., was the guest of his brother and sister-in-law, Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Mathes, the past week.

Highland.

THE Woman's Club of Highland closed the year 1916-17 with an interesting programme held at Library Hall last Friday afternoon. Each season the club closes with an elaborate banquet or luncheon, but this year the members voted unanimously to abandon all closing festivities and use the money as a substantial gift to the work of the Red Cross. Accordingly, an informal programme marked the passing of a successful year of this organization. Vocal selections were given by Mrs. J. S. Wood of San Bernardino, and the remainder of the music was devoted to patriotic singing. The retiring president, Mrs. Alice Wilcox, gave a closing address and presented the gavel to Mrs. Cora B. Linville, the incoming officer, who accepted it with a pleasing talk. A reception followed dur-

FOOTWEAR OF THE ANCIENT ORIENTALS

Sometimes in the misty long ago, an Oriental custom was born. Introduced to please the weird fancy of the men of China, it echoed through the ages, represented and upheld in each decade by the noble women of the day. This was the practice of imprisoning the feet in casts that they might never exceed a few inches in length. Such distorted feet—or golden lilies as they are termed, render walking a tedious and agonizing ordeal.

Here is a gorgeously brocaded boot of such a gentlewoman, representing the ideal of this barbaric sense of beauty.

What a Thousand Years Have Done in Footwear

Civilization marching down through ages, hesitates only at the brink of human endurance, whether issues a revolution—not in arms, but in style, manner, and mode of living, so has ancient China felt the call of modernism.

While the tiny Chinese boot is the extreme that modern styles approach, the carefully designed creations of the present season, impart to the feminine foot grace, style and beauty without physical injury.

Of these there is here for your inspection a most complete showing.

A Timely Study in Authoritative Standards of Good Taste in Home Furnishings

¶ The standards of taste so noticeable in the rich and elegant interiors making up the very unusual exhibition on our second floor and in our windows, this week, apply to every home in the land, be it ever so humble.

¶ Every home cannot afford such elaborate furniture, rare hangings, costly imported rugs, lamps and other appointments, but the harmony, coloring, tone, character and the beauty of arrangement, are standards which may be correctly followed.

¶ No matter where your home may be, the whole wide world of elegance and culture is open to you, and the standards set by this unusual exhibition will aid you.

¶ Owing to its unusual importance and the remarkable attention it is attracting, the display will be continued all this week. Do Not Miss It!

Oxnard.

A DOZEN friends of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Burstall were invited to their home Thursday evening in celebration of Mr. Burstall's birthday anniversary, the party being a surprise to the host. Yellow flowers and ferns were attractively used in decorating, and yellow score and place cards further carried out the color motif. Prizes were won by Mrs. Leon Revalon, Miss Kate Nobel and J. Dewell. The guests wee Messrs. and Mmes. J. Killip, Leon Revalon, J. Dewell, George Decker, Guy Douthwaite, Mrs. W. L. Dunn, Miss Kate Nobel.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Moore were hosts at a merry party Saturday night, dancing and games being the entertainment provided for the forty guests invited. An enjoyable supper was served.

Mrs. Orin Waggoner entertained about thirty friends at a pleasant afternoon party Friday in honor of Mrs. A. S. Tracy. She was assisted in entertaining by Mrs. M. H. Giles and Mrs. John Chamberlain.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Langley left last week for Kentucky, Mr. Langley's old home. While there they will visit Mr. Langley's mother, also his brother, Congressman John Langley, and other relatives

Miss Irene Maddocks of Oakland, who gave two concerts in the county last week, was the guest of her friend and former teacher, Mrs. J. M. Barnhart, during her stay. She delighted a large audience of music lovers Tuesday night with a programme in which she was assisted by Mrs. W. D. Bannister, Miss Fannie Edmondson, Miss Blanche Baker and J. Leslie Forster.

Mrs. Ray Farrell entertained at dinner Sunday in honor of the birthday anniversary of her sister, Miss Mamie Eaton, of Ventura, her other sister, Mrs. Hazel Eaton, also coming from Ventura for the occasion.

Invitations have been issued by the graduating class of the Oxnard Union High School for the commencement exercises, which will take place Thursday evening, and for the class play, to be given on Wednesday evening.

The children of the Junior Music Club gave an excellent programme for their elders at the monthly meeting of the Oxnard Music Club Thursday evening, at the home of Miss Alice Day. The numbers included a violin duet, by Frances Forster and Emil Richen, accompanied by Martin Bannister; solo, "Bararolle," from "Hoffman," Harold Schaezlein, with a talk on the opera by Wenley Krouser; piano duet from "Il Trovatore," Edith Stephenson and Ethel Haydock, with violin obligato by Frances Forster. After this programme Mrs. Dorothy Backus sang two solos, Paul Lehmann sang two solos and Miss Kathleen Donlon played a piano solo.

Redlands.

THE social calendar here is full to overflowing with the events that are always attendant upon graduation time, both for the High School and the university. The seniors of the High School are having a vacation and are spending the time in a round of gaiety, parties, dances, auto trips and other affairs. The university affairs do not start until the last of the week, for graduation there is a week later than at the High School.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Rumohr on Thursday evening celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding. The evening was spent in playing five hundred. The guests presented the couple with a large silver platter as a remembrance. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Gist, M. F. Boettger, C. A. Boettger, D. H. Rumohr, A. W. Huffman, C. A. Maccubbin, F. Benningsdorf, W. England, Mrs. C. H. Crain, Mrs. J. A. Bieber, Mrs. Thomas Shannon, Mrs. Helen Leptien, Mrs. H. Curran, Miss Louise Crain, Miss Charlotte Leptien, Lulu Boettger, Lottie Rumohr, Walter Kolb, Ivan Faxon, Walter and Edward Shannon.

Mrs. Henry Crain entertained on Friday afternoon with a handkerchief shower for Miss Viola Ruth Sharpe, formerly of this city, who is visiting here, and who is to be married to K. C. Thompson of Los Angeles June 6. Those present were Anna Ortman, Louise Crain, Corinne James, Mabel Matthews, Ruth Gullic, H. P. Mathwin, M. Gullic, W. R. Stocker, C. H. Crain, J. Cowene, Paul Langfor, Walter Hanson, E. Blake, Byron Raugh and T. Anderson of Los Angeles.

Miss Mamie Goodman, who is to be married to Clyde Harrod on June 6, was the guest of honor at a shower given by Mrs. Stanley Goodman. The guests sewed during the afternoon for the bride-to-be.

Miss Cleo Ballard was the hostess at an informal dancing party on Thursday evening, complimenting Misses Doreen and Margaret Lyon and Miss Nancy Robinson, who are soon to leave for the East. The other guests were Mary Pottenger, Karolyn King, Anita Kerr, Worden and Billy Bethel, Harl McDonald, Robert Burke, Philip Wynne, Dushane Hynson and Silas Ballard.

Rev. A. E. Ishammoastor of the Lutheran Church was successfully surprised when the members of the church gathered at the home with large baskets filled with good things to eat. He was presented with a radiant grill and the evening was spent in playing games and having a good time.

Mrs. Robert Harold entertained informally with five tables of bridge yesterday afternoon at her home, Casa Moreno. Mrs. Porteus Palmer and Mrs. John P. Fisk presided at the tea tables during the afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Harris have left for New York, where they will spend several weeks and where they will be the guests of honor when a large number of their friends there celebrate their first wedding anniversary.

Mrs. Claude Griffith entertained during the week with a bridge party, arranging six tables for her guests. Following the games several friends came in for tea. Mrs. Nathan Burns and Mrs. E. D. Patterson presided at the tea tables.

At a charming affair given on Tuesday evening announcement was made of a double wedding to take place June 9, when S. E. Field of El Toro, a son of S. E. Field of this city, and Miss Louise Oakey will be married and Miss Jessie Field, daughter of Mr. Field, and Ira Shambaug of Clarinda, O., will be married. Miss Oakey is the niece of Mr. and Mrs. John Oakey of San Bernardino. Mr. Field is the manager of the Carpenner Brothers' olive ranch at El Toro. Miss Field is one of the national field secretaries of the Y.W.C.A., and the wedding will be at the Field home here on Fourth street.

Miss Vivian Hubble of Lordsburg and Miss Elizabeth Smith of Madera, two of the graduates of the college of music of the University of Redlands, gave their graduating recital on Wednesday, which was attended by a large number of friends. They were assisted by Gladys Ogborn, accompanist, and Irene Finley, violinist.

The members of the First Baptist Church celebrated the eighth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Frank B. Matthews with a church social on Tuesday evening. A programme consisting of music by the orchestra, songs by the Plus Ultra boys, readings by Gladys Thacker, a talk by E. S. Foote, response by Mr. Matthews and songs by Mrs. S. Guy Jones made it a delightful affair. Refreshments were served by the committee in charge.

Glendale.

MRS. MANSON of No. 205 Lomita avenue was a luncheon guest recently of Mrs. S. J. Fambro of No. 208 West Broadway. The women, one 78 years old and the other in her eightieth year, were classmates at Monroe College, Forsyth, Ga., from 1854 to 1857.

Miss Clara Pile of Los Angeles was the guest of Miss Eunice Pert of No. 1111 West Seventh street, Monday.

The Misses Leone and Lena Mae Brice of No. 152 South Kenwood street, accompanied by their mother, Mrs. Brice, and several girl friends, motored to Whittier Monday afternoon.

At the recent annual meeting of the California society of the United States Daughters of the War of 1912, held at the Alexandria Hotel, two Glendale women were given official positions. Mrs. H. E. Bartlett was elected first vice-president, while Mrs. R. W. Meeker was made corresponding secretary.

John Sharpe, Jr., a member of the graduating class of the local High School, gave a dancing party Thursday evening, at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Sharpe. About thirty-five of the young man's classmates enjoyed the affair.

On Friday evening, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Manson on Dryden street, the marriage took place of their daughter Lucille to Harold Cook of Los Angeles.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Miles, residents of Glendale the past three years, will return soon to Taft, Cal., where Mr. Miles will resume his

Gifts to the Bride

ONLY by spending months in a personal visit to the better shops and the more important marts of this country could one possibly hope to obtain the breadth and character of wedding gift selection which is made available to you here at the "California."

The hundreds and hundreds of uncommon home furnishing suggestions provide a latitude of selection for the gift seeker which knows practically no limitation in price or purpose.

You may pay as little as a dollar or so for a beautiful mahogany bud vase, or flower vase, or candle stick, or, still, just a few dollars for a pair of unusual book-ends, an artistic mirror for the boudoir or living room, an antique gold photo frame, a mahogany tray, a beautiful table or floor standard lamp, a magnificent jardiniere stand, or an uncommon jardiniere, or a little more for a "Chaise Longue," a sewing table, a luxurious davenport, a davenport table, an Oriental rug. There are scores of such suggestions here—especially appropriate for gifts to the bride.

Welcome to look, whether you buy or not.

Artesia.

ONE of the charming social affairs of the week was given on Wednesday by Mrs. G. Arnold at her home on Artesia street. It was a shower in honor of Mrs. W. Neal. The rooms were tastily decorated with mustard blossoms and greenery. Dainty refreshments were served. The guests were Mmes. T. C. Gillett, G. Terwilliger, E. Imbert, W. L. Smith, M. Peterson, D. Sprowl, E. Webster, L. Elliot, W. P. Esholm, A. Bodine, O. Chamberlain, F. E. Owens, S. Beckwith, A. F. Sprowel, C. Guloin, R. Smith, and the Misses Nellie Beckwith, Lois Esholm, Alice Imbert, Lela Newton, Winifred Jackson and Mary Jackson.

After a long residence in Artesia Justice of the Peace and Mrs. H. H. Rockwell are leaving for Manteca in the San Joaquin Valley. A farewell was given at their home on Wednesday evening by the members of the Bellflower Sunshine Club. Forty-two members took possession of the house and grounds. An impromptu programme of musical numbers and readings was given; then a big fire was started on the lawn for an old-fashioned wiener bake. After the repast the crowd gathered around the fire and told such stories.

Mrs. George Frampton entertained her Sunday-school class on Saturday at her Third-street home, the occasion being the birthday of her small son Howard, a member of the class.

Mrs. Frank Caldwell was the hostess at a dinner given to a small group of friends at her new home on North Main street. The guests were Rev. and Mrs. T. H. Wilkinson, Mrs. Sarah Frampton and Mr. and Mrs. W. Harvey Smith.

Miss Frances Reach was hostess at a surprise party given in honor of her sister, Miss Gladys Reach, on Tuesday evening. Old-fashioned games were played and refreshments of punch and cake were served. The guests were the Misses Marion Turner, Elsie Riley, Irene Sistrunk, Nannie Riley, Emma Schacht, Bernice Schacht, Ella Jabbs, Vermilia Vivian, Gladys Reach, Frances Reach, and Messrs. Anaheim.

MR. AND MRS. GERALD SIMPSON entertained last Monday evening at their home on South Ohio street, the guests being Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Sears, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Hargrave and Mr. and Mrs. J. Malcom. Dainty refreshments were served.

Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Rust were host and hostess to a number of friends at their home on a recent evening. The time was enjoyably spent playing five hundred, first prize for the women going to Mrs. Hartung and the consolation to Mrs. Hartfield. Mr. Hartfield won the first prize for men and Mr. Boone received the consolation. Refreshments were served. Present were Messrs. and Mmes. C. Boone, B. Hartfield, Edgar Hartung, O. A. Mullinix and A. Zimmerman.

Ben Yorba and Miss Ubenia Yorba entertained with a formal ball at the Country Club. Flowers and ferns transformed the hall into a bower of beauty and thirty couples danced. Music was furnished by the Art Cannon orchestra. Punch and cake were served the guests, who were present from Anaheim, Santa Ana, Yorba Linda, La Habra, Pomona, Los Angeles and Riverside.

Mr. and Mrs. James Adams entertained last Sunday evening at dinner at their home, No. 226 North Olive street, in honor of Earl Adams of Terra Bella. Present were Mr. and Mrs. Argus Adams and family, Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Hines, Mr. and Mrs. Keith Rush and son Virgil and Mr. Earl Adams.

On a recent evening a number of young friends of Barney Stoeffel and his bride drove to Talbert to give the young couple a surprise. They took along with them tin cans, old boots and other paraphernalia. On the way down they had all kinds of fun telling each other of the jokes they would play on the couple. Arriving at the house they found that Mr. and Mrs. Stoeffel were not at home.

Miss Myra Sheldon was married to Paul Luzier last Sunday morning by Rev. L. C. Yoeman at his home on West Broadway. The couple were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Earl Hiserodt, the latter being a sister of Mr. Luzier. In the evening a dinner was given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Luzier at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Sheldon. The silver, cut glass and china that the bride's grandparents received on their golden wedding anniversary were used. The rooms and table were beautifully decorated with ferns, pink and white roses and Shasta daisies. The bride and groom will make their home in Placentia, where his parents reside. The bride is well known in this city, having lived here for several years. She is a graduate of the class of 1915, and the groom has many friends in Placentia. He is an electrician, employed by the Standard Oil Company at La Habra.

Alhambra.

A WEDDING of simple, but beautiful appointments was that of Miss Rose May Hatch and Dwight Warren French, which was solemnized at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Nellie E. Hatch, No. 115 North Almansor, Wednesday morning. The service was read by Rev. John R. Atwill, rector of the Church of our Savior. Sweet peas and ferns were employed decoratively at the wedding breakfast following the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. French left for Visalia where they will reside. Mrs. French is well known and has many friends in this vicinity, having attended Pomona College and later the Normal College, Los Angeles. Mr. French is a civil engineer and a graduate of Stanford.

Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Clarke and Mr. and Mrs. William Shivers of Ramona Park sponsored one of the delightful affairs of the week when they entertained with a tennis party. The luncheon table was arranged under the vine embowered pergola of the Clarke home and the following guests were present: Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Geer, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Boyer, Mr. and Mrs. Waugh, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. McCormack, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Turner, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Clapp, Mr. and Mrs. H. Quimby and Miss Lister.

Golden glow pointed a yellow color scheme employed by Mrs. Clarence Van Graham in entertaining Friday afternoon for members of the Los Amigas Whist Club. The following were guests: Mrs. G. Morgan, Mrs. P. Johnson, Mrs. H. Hazzard, Mrs. Jenkins, Mrs. Parker, Mrs. Ida Preston, Mrs. Snyder, Mrs. Barker, Mrs. Van Zant, Mrs. W. Dulley and Mrs. R. B. Clapp.

On Tuesday evening, about thirty officers and members of the Eastern Star surprised Miss Rose May Hatch, a charming bride-elect whose marriage to Dwight French was a

Kayser's Lisle Union Suits 50c

—White only. French band top, low neck, sleeveless, cuff knee. Fine gauze weight. All wearing parts reinforced. Would sell for a half more in the regular way. Extra sizes 59c. (Main Floor—Jacoby's.)

Have produced conditions which make the quick moving of accumulated stocks imperative. The merchandise is all new this season, but unseasonable weather has retarded selling, and the incoming summer stocks must be accommodated with more room. The decisive price reductions we will make on many lines will compel every thrifty woman who knows values to supply present wants and to anticipate for the future. It is our established custom NOT to use comparative prices.

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Canada's Liberal Offer of Wheat Land to Settlers is open to you—to every farmer or farmer's son who is anxious to establish for himself a happy home and prosperity. Canada's hearty invitation this year is more attractive than ever. Wheat is much higher but her fertile farm land just as cheap, and in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta

160 Acre Homesteads Are Actually Free to Settlers and Other Land Sold at from $15 to $20 Per Acre

The great demand for Canadian Wheat will keep up the price. Where a farmer can get over $2 for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre he is bound to make money—that's what you can expect in Western Canada. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed Farming in Western Canada is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising.

The excellent grasses, full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent. There is now an unusual demand for farm laborers to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service in the war. Long Beach.

ONE of the delightful social affairs of the week was the farewell party given Tuesday evening at the Atwood home, No. 1239 Cedar avenue. The Misses Minnie Peet and Maude Atwood were the hostesses and Amy and Hallie Spicer the honor guests. The Misses Spicer left Long Beach Thursday for their old home in North Carolina, where they will spend the summer. The writing of travel letters, assigned for each day of the trip, was one of the diversions of the evening. This was followed by music, games and refreshments. Guests were the Misses Ethel Scott, Florence Fisher, Minnie Stow, Mabel Graves, Annie and Bertha Wallace, Helen Sweet, Fritz, Deborah Haines, Marian Atwood, Mabel Huyck and Mmes. Elliott, Janet Roberts and Atwood.

Miss Inda Irene Dillingham and Glen R. Smith were married Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock at the home of the parents of the bride, No. 3045 Theresa street. Rev. A. W. Shamel, pastor of the Central Methodist Church, officiated. Large white baskets of pink and white bloom, with banks of lilies, ferns and carnations, adorned the room. Friends escorted the young people to their new home, No. 1010 Lime avenue.

Cards and dancing were enjoyed by a number of the friends of the Misses Gladys McCoy and Charlotte Creed, who entertained Wednesday at No. 19 Alboni place. Blossoms in national colors and many flags adorned the rooms.

Beginning with junior class day Wednesday, and continuing through to Friday of next week, there will be something doing almost every day and evening at Compton Union High School for the juniors and seniors. The senior play, "What Became of Parker," is to be given Thursday and Friday, with leading parts taken by Frances McGargar and Edward Choate of Watts. The latter is leading man, the Parker of the play, while Eugene Frost, another Watts student, is his partner. Senior class day and exhibit is scheduled for Wednesday, June 13, following the alumni banquet on the evening of the 12th inst. On June 14, at the school auditorium, the baccalaureate sermon will be given by Dr. J. Inwood of Long Beach at 8 o'clock in the evening and Dr. B. R. Baumgardt of Los Angeles will deliver the address at the commencement Friday evening, June 15.

Twenty-five boys out of a class of forty in the athletic department of the High School who won "C" in athletics and debates for the year, were given an outing at Venice Saturday, making the trip in a school truck with Principal O. S. Thompson, Coach J. E. Ranker and H. E. Barnes, teacher of science, as companions.

Covina.

MISS EDITH WATERHOUSE, whose engagement to Thomas Reed was recently announced, was given a shower Saturday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Reed on East Badillo street, Mrs. Reed, being assisted by Miss Mae Allison. It was a Dutch party. Delft blue and white with dainty touches of pink carried out this idea. On the table, where refreshments of Dutch salad and wafers, ices cream and cake were served, and quaint blue vases holding pink sweet peas formed the decoration. Blue baskets held Dutch candy kisses for each guest and Dutch maidens marked the places. Among the pleasures of the afternoon were the vocal solos by Miss Mellicent Waterhouse of Pasadena and the piano solos by Miss Crete King. Following this was a guessing contest in which Miss Mellicent Waterhouse was the winner of a dainty hand-painted plate. At the table another "honeymoon" game was played and Miss Waterhouse was given a card which led her to a huge Dutch wheelbarrow filled with jars of jams and jellies for the new home.

Mrs. S. S. Aschenbrenner, president of the Monday Afternoon Club of Covina, and Mrs. Mattison B. Jones, new district president of Federated Women's Clubs, were the guests of honor at the annual luncheon of the Ebell Club of Pomona last Friday. Both gave short after-dinner talks.

Miss Ruth Reynolds, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elsberry Reynolds of La Verne and Chicago, and a niece of Mrs. Harriet Reynolds of Covina, was married to Frank Buelcher of Pomona Tuesday evening at the Reynolds's home at La Verne. Mrs. Reynolds and her daughter, Miss Victoria, and two sons, Jerome and Irven, were among those present.

Miss Myrtle Maxfield, whose marriage to William Colver will take place shortly, has been the recipient of many showers and social functions during the month. Last Saturday afternoon two showers were given in her honor, the first being a bungalow shower at the home of Miss Gladys Coons on West Badillo street. The gifts, which were many and useful, were brought to the guest of honor by a make-believe express man. Games and guessing contests also aided in the entertainment. The guests were all school friends of Miss Maxfield, and were Misses Jane Walters, Alice Fesler, Lucy Wheeler, Belle and Alta Fesler, Hilda Anderson, Ruth Shaver, Mrs. G. F. Maxfield and Mrs. C. P. Colver. The second affair was a handkerchief shower given by the Sunday-school class of the Presbyterian Church, of which Miss Maxfield is a member, at the home of Miss Ruth Butler.

The marriage of Miss Zylpha McKain of Los Angeles to Harold Roebuck took place Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock in the Catholic Church in Hollywood. The bride, who is a niece of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Potter, was attended by her cousin, Miss Hazel Potter, as bridesmaid. Miss McKain has many acquaintances in Covina, where she has been the guests of her aunt and uncle at frequent intervals. Mr. and Mrs. Potter and Miss Hazel and Harold Potter were guests at the wedding breakfast.

Following closely upon the announcement of the engagement came the wedding of Miss Hazel Clifford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Clifford, to William Sprotte, which was a complete surprise to the many friends of the young couple. At a party given at the Clifford home the date of the wedding was announced for June 20, but the young people decided to give their friends a surprise and were married Tuesday evening at the home of the bride's parents on Third street in the presence of only the most intimate friends and the family.

Miss Ethel Kendall was hostess at a party celebrating her eighteenth birthday, given at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Kendall, last Friday evening. Games and guessing contests, for which prizes were awarded Miss Opal Searcy and Miss Leora Kring, and musical numbers made a pleasant evening. The guests were Misses Vernie Johnson, Leora Kring, Opal Searcy, Florence Taylor, Amy Jones, Nettie Heidt, Messrs. Carmel Kring, David Miller, George Gorham, Leslie Olmstead, Edmund Nash, Guy Shelton and Walter Heidt and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Kendall of Huntington Park.

The Newcomers' Club members were entertained Wednesday at the F. C. Devendorf home, the occasion being the birthday of Mr. Devendorf. Supper was served in the large dining-room. In the evening the guests enjoyed cards and dancing. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Groom, Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Rice, Mr. and Mrs. Will H. Potter, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Fields, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph T. Vining, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Jones and Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Devendorf.

Mr. and Mrs. John Gorham of East Center street have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Annie May, to William David Walker of Upland. The wedding will take place during June in the First Baptist Church. Miss Gorham is well known among the young people of Covina and especially in the Baptist Church. Mr. Walker is recently from Solomon, Kan.

Duarte.

SPRING offers many attractions for out-of-town social affairs, and two pleasant events of last week partook, at least in part, of the joys of the garden. Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. Francis A. Bliss were the hosts of the members of the faculty of the High School, and the members of the school board. The late afternoon hours were spent under the giant oaks and in the garden, and at 6:30 o'clock dinner was served in the dining-room. Yellow and white were the colors chosen to adorn the table, and the flowers, place cards and the viands of the menu all carried out the color scheme. Members of the School Association assisted Mrs. Bliss in entertaining. Music was a feature of the evening, and in an author-guessing contest, the side led by Clyde Yerge was awarded the prize.

Thursday Mrs. Ernest B. Rivers of Los Rios Rancho was the hostess of the women of the Presbyterian Church at a prettily arranged afternoon party. The charming gardens that are a feature of the country home of the Riverses were thoroughly examined and in the pavilion, assisting Mrs. Rivers in receiving were Mrs. A. B. Clapp, Mrs. W. D. Landis, Mrs. C. H. Sarwine, Mrs. S. A. Cochran, Miss Hutchins, Mrs. L. N. Wheeler and Miss Plummer. Mrs. Clapp presented those who assisted with the programme. The speaker of the afternoon was Cameron Johnson, who spoke forcefully and entertainingly of experiences in visiting mission fields. Frozen dainties and cakes were served during the social hour.

The members of the Spanish Club formed a jolly picnic party at Brookside Park, Friday evening. Miss Lois Partridge was one of the hostesses.

Mrs. Walter B. Leffer gave a pleasant luncheon party Tuesday in honor of her sister, Miss Leffler of Manhattan Beach. Ferns and graceful amaryllis were massed in the center of the table and about the table were gathered with the hostess and honoree, Mrs. W. C. Parsons, Mrs. John Dickey, Mrs. Frank Ferguson, Mrs. W. K. Shaw, Mrs. E. A. Moore, Mrs. C. H. Sarwine, and Mrs. W. H. Hoagland.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Squier gave a lunch, Friday, at their country home on Mountain View avenue. Assisting them in receiving were Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Parker. About twenty-five were present and the women of the party spent the afternoon sewing for charity and visiting.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Streeter entertained the Duarte Card Club Thursday evening at dinner.

Miss Marjorie Morgan was hostess to the young women of the Foothill Bridge Club, Tuesday at 'Leven Oaks Hotel, at luncheon. Covers were laid for the club members at tables decorated with spring blossoms and after luncheon bridge was the pastime.

Mr. and Mrs. Park Densmore gave a pleasant dinner and card party Saturday evening for their sons, Robert and Ralph Densmore, who leave soon for the reserve officers' school at the Presidio. The guests included Capt. and Mrs. C. O. Brown, Lieut. and Mrs. A. W. Hazen, Sergt. and Mrs. A. G. Maddock, Mr. and Mrs. Leo McMullen, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Miller, Miss Grace Smith, Miss Ruth Booker, Miss Dorothea Taylor, Charles F. Davis and Lieut. W. W. Bacon.

Miss Marjorie Morgan, daughter of Mrs. B. H. Morgan of Oak Terrace, who is to be the bride of Hardy C. Harris, is being complimented with social affairs, and on Monday Miss Mary Weston gave a luncheon for Miss Morgan.

Colton.

CONTRIBUTING to the chain of delightful post-nuptial affairs that have had Mrs. Denair Adams Butler as honoree was the informal musicale given Monday afternoon at the country home of the James Barnhills with Mrs. Barnhill and daughter, Miss Jessie, as hostesses. Cecile Brunner roses, pink Canterbury bells and Sweet William were used decoratively in the rooms. The artists of the afternoon were: Miss Mildred Jamison, pianist, and Miss Dorothy Hess, violinist, of Los Angeles, pupils, respectively, of Herr and Mrs. Thilo Becker. Following the programme a collation was served, the assistants being the Misses Helen Rolph, Mildred Bonnell, Julia Hert, Lucille and Frances Tanner.

Although it was announced in Santa Ana last Saturday night at the home of mutual friends, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hansen, the latter formerly Miss Ama Button of Colton, the engagement of Miss Edith Purdum and Theodore B. Kelly is of exceptional interest in this city, where both taught for several years in the High School, and which was the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wade Purdum, now of Eagle Rock, for about ten years. The wedding will be an event of June 26, taking place at the Church of the Angels. Walter Pritchard of this city will act as best man. Following their honeymoon the couple will reside in Santa Ana, where for the past three years the groom has been head of the chemistry department of the High School. The bride-elect is a graduate of the local High School and of Stanford University. Her M.A. degree was taken at Berkeley, after which she traveled in Europe. The past year she has taught English at the Los Angeles Normal School.

Dancing at the Seth Hartley home with an hour of music and the enjoyment of refreshments afterward at the J. P. Isbell residence furnished frolic for a dozen young people Friday week. The festivity was in farewell to Miss Lola Dugan, who left Monday for her home in Cincinnati after a two months' visit with an aunt, Mrs. W. B. Hunsacker, the others of the party being Mr. and Mrs. Palmer Willets, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Griffith, the Misses Ellen Corlett, and Thelma Isbell, W. H. Chase, Roy Willis, Carl Williams and Chester Hartley.

Women of the High School faculty, Mrs. J. Butler, Mrs. G. W. Leonard, Miss Lelia Watson, Hettie Withey and Mabel Irwin, were hostesses to the High School girls and those of the eighth grade at the final meeting of the year for the G.S.B. held on Tuesday afternoon. The grammar school girls, who will be of next term's freshmen class, were invited especially that they might meet the teachers and become acquainted with the building, of which they made a tour of inspection. Talks by Miss Withey and Miss Marguerite Ahler, president of the girls' student body, a travelogue of a trip to Yuba by Mrs. Janet Fish and piano solos by Miss Violet Ward furnished a pleasing programme, after which sherbet and cake were served.

Miss Reina Bullis, accompanied by her nephew, Noble Saunders, left Sunday for San Francisco, whence they will sail for Managua, Nicaragua, where Miss Bullis will become principal of a normal school for girls.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Rose, Mr. and Mrs. Orrie Lee and Mrs. Lee's mother, Mrs. Lewis, are planning to leave within the next few days for an automobile trip to the north. Mrs. Lewis will stop off at Lodi to visit relatives while the two young couples will go on until they find a location to their liking, it being their plan to settle in the north.

Huntington Park.

MRS. LAURA BAGLEY is entertaining at her house in Balboa the teachers of the Huntington Park grammar school.

Excelling all previous amateur performances given here was the verdict on the play given by the Knights of Pythias at the High School auditorium, Friday night. Miss Harriet L. Candee of this city coached the players. Those who took part were: William T. Salvin, Kathryn Critchley, Ralph Desmond, Will Candee, Evelyn Pierson, Robert McColley, Lorrane Miller, Marjorie Johnson, Frederick Groton, Arthur Scribner, J. H. McEldowney and Ray Vosburg.

The Woman's Improvement Club held its social meeting at the auditorium of the clubhouse Tuesday afternoon. A large attendance of members and friends enjoyed the music, lecture and demonstrations. The programme consisted of vocal solo by Miss Hafer, accompanied by Mr. Rapp; reading, Mrs. Brown, and demonstrations of various foods by a Los Angeles chemist. Refreshments were served. The usual card party was held at the clubhouse Friday afternoon, June 1.

Herbert R. Pomeroy and Miss Lela France were married by Rev. Alfred Hughes at the Methodist parsonage Wednesday evening. The wedding of these Huntington Park young people will come as a surprise to many friends. The groom is employed in business here and the bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. France of No. 315 South Stafford avenue. The couple will live at No. 233 East Clarendon.

Mr. and Mrs. S. I. Becker have left for their ranch in Fresno, where they will spend the summer. Mrs. Becker is principal of the Malabar school.

The Young Married People's Dancing Club of this city gave an informal dance at Jones's Hall, Thursday evening, May 31. Mr. and Mrs. Will Candee, Mr. and Mrs. Boss, Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Leonard, Mr. and Mrs. J. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Baker and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lowe are members of this club.

The Woman's Club held an interesting meeting Thursday morning at the home of Miss Ella McCord on North Malabar street. Mrs. Christensen led the discussion.

Mrs. John L. Ehlers entertained with a luncheon at her home at No. 211 South Rugby, Friday. Covers were laid for eight. Guests from Long Beach were Mrs. W. C. Van Loon and Mrs. O. W. Leonard.

A luncheon in honor of Mrs. C. S. Fleming was given at the home of Mrs. W. C. Van Loon last Tuesday. Mrs. Fleming is 81 years old, and is an old Cincinnati friend of the Van Loon family.

La Crescenta.

THE Improvement Society entertained the Federation of Foothill Valley Clubs Friday evening. There was a large attendance. Refreshments were served.

The dance given by the La Crescenta Dancing Club, Saturday night, in charge of Mrs. T. Schultz and Mrs. Miller, was attended by a large number of members and friends. The decorations were patriotic in design and all the proceeds of the refreshment booth were donated to the Red Cross.

The graduation exercises of the eighth-year pupils were held Thursday evening before a capacity crowd. The speaker of the evening was Mark Keppel, County Superintendent of Schools. Dean Culberson gave the class prophecy, Alberta Bertrand read the class will and the valedictory was delivered by Rudolph Rheinschild. Other members of the class were Richard Starr, Andrew Peddie, Clara Green, Isabella Thompson and Amanda Norberg.

Red Cross classes for the making of supplies are held every Tuesday and Thursday afternoons at the schoolhouse, with Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Chaflin as instructors.

George W. Hall has gone to Ohio on a business trip.

La Crescenta young people are to be the guests of the La Canada Dancing Club the evening of June 9.

Eagle Rock City.

THE annual picnic of the Harmonia Club of Los Angeles was held on Thursday at the home of Mrs. Blonda Banks Colburn on North Acacia avenue. About 100 members sat down to lunch. An original poem by Mrs. Colburn was sung to the tune of "Maryland, My Maryland."

Mrs. R. R. Henderson of North Eddy avenue entertained during the past week, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Templeton of Monticello, Iowa, Mrs. Clara Duer of Cleveland, O., Mrs. Lucy Atkinson of Fairfield, Iowa, and Harry W. Culbertson of Chicago.

Last evening at the Twentieth Century Clubhouse was held the first annual dance and ball of the Eagle Rock Home Guards. A large crowd was present.

On Tuesday afternoon, at headquarters, the Red Cross Society of Eagle Rock held an informal reception. About 200 were present during the afternoon and viewed the work that is being done by the society.

Mrs. Harry C. Daniels and baby left on Thursday for an extended visit with relatives and friends in Chicago and Batavia, Ill.

Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Griggs motored to Bakersfield Saturday where they visited friends.

Miss Ellen Galpin, has returned to her home in this city from Berkeley.

Mrs. A. Gibbs of St. Louis is a visitor at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. J. Hull of West Sycamore avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Miller of Rowland avenue were week-end visitors at Catalina.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Foley had as their guests over the week-end Mrs. L. Huey, Miss Minnie Holly and E. Huey of Hollywood.

Mrs. Z. Harmon of Rowland avenue was an over-Sunday guest of friends in Santa Monica.

BLOWING UP THE ALPS.

Effect of a Wonderful Explosion Seen by a Pasadenan.

[Lewis R. Freeman in Popular Mechanics:] It was about the middle of last July that the laconic Italian bulletin recorded, in effect, that the blowing of the top off a certain mountain in the Dolomite region had been accomplished, and that a considerable extension of line had followed. That was about all there was to it, I believe; and yet the wonder engendered by the superb audacity of the thing had haunted me from the first. My interest finally impelled me to attempt a visit to the Austro-Italian Alpine front at a time of year when the weather conditions threatened to be prohibitive.

And so it chanced that on a diamond-bright morning in early January I found myself, after a couple of days of strenuous motoring, speeding in a military car past the old customhouse and up into the heart of that most weirdly grand of all Alpine regions, the Dolomites. Already we were well over into what had once been Austrian territory, and the splintered pinnacles which notched the sky line ahead of us were, as my escorting officer explained, held in part by both the Italians and the enemy. As we coasted down into "Cortina de Ampezzo" Capt. X——— pointed to where a clean-lined wall of snow-capped yellow rock reared itself against the deep purple of the western sky.

"That high mountain ridge is the Tofana massif," he said, "and that partly isolated mass of lighter-colored rock (crowned with towers like a medieval stronghold,) at its farther end, is what is left of the famous 'Castelletto.' It is twenty kilometers (about twelve miles) or more away, but your can see even from here how it dominated the valley and road, the later the much-pictured Dolomite road which is also a route of great military importance. Now look at the end of the 'Castelletto' toward the wall of the 'Tofana.' Do you see where it seems to have been sliced off smoothly at an angle of about forty-five degrees? Well, that is the part they blew off last July. Up to them that end, like the other, was crowned with a lofty spire. That spire, the base from which it sprung, the Austrian barracks and munition depots, together with the men stationed there—all were blown up and destroyed in the explosion. Take a good look at it while you have a chance, for the sky-line view is better from a distance than from close at hand, where we shall go this afternoon if the way is open. To see the effect of the explosion at its best," he added, "one should look at it from the Austrian lines, as it was the blowing out of the other side of the mountain which undermined and let down the top."

I had suggested that Lieut. Malvezzi take up the story where his report left off. "That stopped just as things began to happen," I said. "Now tell what did happen."

The tenente laughed a laugh suggestive of rueful reminiscence, and a smile ran round among those of the officers who had heard and understood my words. "So far as I am concerned," he replied, "that covers about five minutes of activity; five minutes for which we had been preparing for six months. You understand that we had constructed a branch tunnel through which our men were to rush and occupy the crater as soon after the explosion as possible. Ecco! The men were all massed ready on and under the terrace, and nothing remained but the making of the connection firing the mine. I took one long look around and then threw over the electric switch closing the circuit. Every one seemed to be holding his breath as he waited. One, two, three seconds passed, in a silence so intense that I heard the sharp 'ping' of the water dripping from the roof of the chamber and striking the pool it had formed below. Then, before any other sound was audible, the whole mountain gave a quick convulsive jerk, strong enough to throw some of the men off their feet. A heavy grinding rumble in the earth came with a shivering that followed the jerk, but the real roar of the explosion (from the outside) was not audible for a second or two later. Only those watching from a distance of several kilometers saw the right-hand pinnacle of the 'Castelletto' give a sudden heave, and then sink out of sight in a cloud of dust and smoke."

Southern Measurement.

[Indianapolis News:] Some mud-bespattered autoists were attempting to reach Nashville, Brown county. Even with chains on their wheels, they were wasting lots of gasoline in investigating a washout or a valley which they had left triumphantly only a few minutes before.

Three times in three hours they had asked the distance and each time had received the same answer.

"'Bout three miles to Nashville."

It is true that in those three hours they had had one blowout and once they had to get a team of horses to pull them out of the mud. But even so, it seemed as if they could not be more than a half-mile away. Finally they met a man on horseback.

"How far to Nashville? Three miles, I suppose!" But the fine sarcasm was not lost on him. He grinned and said in a soft voice:

"You're 'most there. It's jest two whoops and a holler away."

THE COW MANUFACTURER.

The Animal's Products Are Valuable for More than Raw Food.

[Popular Science Monthly.] With no apparent effort the cow goes through her span of years yielding her full quota of milk and looking always as if she could impart great secrets to the world if she had the gift of speech. She is an industrial asset, not a mere purveyor of baby food. It has been proved that casein, which forms over three per cent. of the total weight of cow's milk, is an important commercial product and may be profitably employed in the manufacture of glue, combs, buttons, linoleum, hairpins, toys, paints and even shoe polish.

In the preparation of casein for commercial purposes, about 700 gallons of skimmed milk are put into a great vat and heated to about 135 deg. Fahr. Then very dilute sulphuric acid is added to precipitate the casein or curd. The whey is drawn off and the curd is drained and cut into chunks, after which streams of cold water are played on it to wash out the acid. The curd is then dried with rotary fans and ground into powder, in which form it is placed on the market. One hundred pounds of skimmed milk will yield about 3½ pounds of casein powder.

THE FEAR OF CATS.

Great Men Who Have Suffered Severely from Presence of Felines.

[Baltimore American:] The rejection last week of an Ohio recruit for the United States Marine Corps, because, although fulfilling all physical and mental requirements, he had shown signs of great nervous perturbation, owing to the presence of a cat in the recruiting office, seems to have worked an injustice. For several very celebrated soldiers and great commanders in modern times have suffered from a similar idiosyncracy with regard to cats without having affected their military efficiency and success.

A notable instance was the late Field Marshal Lord Roberts, a warrior sans peur et sans reproche if ever there was one, who did not know the meaning of the word fear, and who won the Victoria Cross a dozen times over in the great Indian Mutiny. Yet the hero of the historic march from Cabul to Candahar and the victorious generalissimo of the South African war at the beginning of the present century, always suffered the utmost discomfort from the presence of a cat in his vicinity, being overtaken by faintness if one happened to be near.

It was not the sight of the cat that influenced him. For on one occasion when there was none in sight he suddenly changed color, showed signs of faintness and exclaimed: "I am sure there is a cat in the room!" No cat could be seen. Lord Roberts became worse. The people upon whom he was calling became alarmed, looked behind curtains and chairs until finally a cat that had been quietly slumbering underneath a sofa, entirely concealed from view, was driven forth and summarily ejected from the room and driven to the lower regions of the establishment, whereupon the veteran field marshal revived and recovered his composure.

The great Napoleon was affected in identically the same way and shortly after winning the battle of Wagram alarmed everyone in the particular wing of the palace of Schonebrunn, devoted to his use, by cries for assistance, that came from his bedroom. He was found to be bathed in cold perspiration, almost fainting and giving every evidence of the greatest physical and mental perturbation. He insisted that there was a cat in the room. Search was made everywhere, without success, until finally one was discovered nestling comfortably in the warmth above the heavy canopy of the bed, near the ceiling, where it was very warm, and, of course, entirely concealed from view.

The Lost Bazaars.

I always said that before I got Tied down by a wife and kids,
I'd go to see the "great god Budd,"
An' the Sphinx an' Pyramids.

It's the big bazaars I want most to see—
What I read in a Kipling book
Has kept me wishin' day an' night
For a chance to go an' look.

I've been workin' steady in Jubb's garage,
An' I've saved what I could have spent
For tobacco an' movies an' now I could take My tour of the Orient.

Yet last night, on the sofa with Nance,
Somehow I let myself slip,
An' I kissed her, an' mentioned what I'd saved,
But not a word of my trip!

Well, Nance isn't bold, yet she dropped a hint
That lots o' folks married on less;
An,' you see, I couldn't act selfish then—
So the matter's settled, I guess.

I'll give her my savin's to fit up a flat;
But today, as I cleaned the cars,
A voice kept sagin': "You paid for that kiss
With your Oriental bazaars!"

J. J. Hill's First Dress Suit.

[Wall Street Journal:] For the trappings of society James J. Hill had little use. He abominated the stiffness and formality of social functions. An old friend, recalling Mr. Hill's dislike for formal society, told of how upon one occasion when the Hill family gave an evening reception at St. Paul Mr. Hill was persuaded only with the utmost difficulty to don a dress suit.

For the occasion an old colored man from the Great Northern offices was to act at the door of the Hill reidence. He stood at his post, awaiting the guests, when Mr. Hill, attired in his evening clothes, came down stairs. The attendant, who had been with Mr. Hill for years, when he saw his "boss" in the unaccustomed attire, chuckled aloud. Mr. Hill caught the sound and looked up. The retainer turned in dismay. Mr. Hill strode up to him, caught him by the shoulder, and said: "What are you laughing at?"

"Deed, I wasn't laughing," gasped the servant.

"Yes, you were," admonished Mr. Hill, "You were laughing at me, and I don't blame you a darn bit."

FOR THE BOY IN CAMP.

First of All, Don't Send Sob Letters or Nightgowns.

[Kansas City Star:] What shall I send that boy in military camp? Many mothers and others are asking that question or will be asking it this summer. In reply, Dr. James Naismith, professor of physical education in the University of Kansas, says: "Send him candy and lemons, a good book and, if his company has a talking machine, a record of light music or something funny. But don't send him sob letters or nightgowns."

Dr. Naismith speaks from thirty years' experience in training university and college youths and from four months' on the border last summer as chaplain of the First Kansas Infantry. He is the inventor of basketball and has trained hundreds of athletes and kept thousands of students physically fit.

"Sob letters and nightgowns were the most worrying and useless things the boys on the border last summer received from home," said Dr. Naismith. "Write that boy once or twice a week. Send him the home paper. He may not seem prompt about writing home, but never forget he has an insatiable appetite for home letters and the home paper. His appetite for sweets, too, is very keen. The army ration, wholesome and nourishing, hasn't many trimmings, so candy always is warmly welcomed by the boys. Home-made fudge or caramel candy, something that doesn't mash or melt easily, should be sent. Put it in oiled paper in quarter-pound boxes and send as many of the boxes as you desire in a larger box.

"Don't pack a lot of candy in one box. Don't send chicken, cake or other stuff that will spoil in shipping. One mother tried to send her boy a little of almost everything in a box last summer. When it arrived at Eagle Pass, Tex., it was an awful mess, for it contained a layer cake in which were embedded bananas, oranges, lemons, onions and a baked chicken. Lemons, however, are always welcome.

"There is no need to send clothing or medicines. Uncle Sam will look out for that. But small musical instruments are valuable in keeping a camp cheerful. Banjos, mandolins, even ukeleles, are good. Baseballs, bats, gloves and masks always are welcome. Anything that encourages healthful play is good to send.

"I am very much in earnest when I ask that no sob letters be sent the boys. Also, if you know of some boy who has no one to write him or to send him candy, remember him. I saw boys last summer who felt it quite a little that there was no one to remember them. They're all just big kiddies, you know, and they need appreciation."

Music from Crying Babes.

[Indianapolis News:] The crying of babies is not regarded as musical, but nevertheless it is. The Rev. Noel Bonava Hunt, a senior curate of St. Matthew's Church, Willesden, Eng., has set infants' cries to music. He was particularly impressed with the musical quality of the wails and cries of the infants at the baptismal services held at St. Matthew's. He tried to persuade the church musicians to catch the sounds and set them to music, but they refused. At length the Rev. Mr. Hunt himself recorded the sounds in the form of a chant set to the words of the One hundred and thirty-seventh psalm: "By the waters of Babylon we sat down and wept, when we remembered thee, O Zion." "The composition is original," the Rev. Mr. Hunt says, "and it is a little grotesque, but it is musical. It represents the meaning of the words to which it is set."

A Mt. Holyoke Farm.

[Boston Transcript:] Mt. Holyoke College is planning a garden of from seven to ten acres. About 600 of the faculty and students have offered to assist this spring in place of organized out-of-doors sport and from that number squads will be formed to be supervised in the work of planting and starting the "farm." Two of the college houses will be kept open during the summer and three squads of thirty or forty students each will do the summer work from the middle of June to the middle of September. A committee of the faculty is making the arrangements for this work, and it will be done under the supervision of the director of the grounds. Careful accounting will be kept. The vegetables will be bought by the college, and if the venture is not a great economic success, it is hoped to add appreciably to the food supply of the world.

Money has been given to help finance the project by members of the faculty and students.

A Stamp for Canadian Troops.

[Youth's Companion:] One of the most interesting stamps the world war has produced has only recently reached the hands of American collectors. It is one issued in Ottawa, Can., for use by relatives and friends of Canadian soldiers stationed on the Bahama Islands. The Canadian government issued a stamp for special dispatch of mail matter from Canada to the Canadian soldiers on the Bahamas. It seems odd that Canadian stamps were not used. This is a philatelic mystery yet to be solved.

The stamp employed is the 5-pence orange of the Bahaman issue of 1903, but surcharged in black, special delivery. The picture on the stamp is of "the Queen's Staircase," near Nassau, one of the most beautiful views on those islands. It is understood that only 800 were issued; if that is true the stamp will become one of the war rarities.

The Boys Scouts Making Good.

[Washington Star:] For some years the Boy Scouts of America have been training and drilling and learning in preparation for just such an emergency as that which now confronts the country. They have been preparing themselves for national usefulness. There are now about 218,000 of these boys in garden work in the United States, and today they constitute a valuable civic force, in fact, an army of national defense. A new slogan has been sounded: "Every Scout to Feed a Soldier." They have already gone to work to make this war cry good. They are cultivating the soil in every city of the United States. In Washington they now have under tillage about 300 acres in Potomac Park. They are doing practically all the work themselves. The Boy Scouts' crop this year will be a most valuable contribution to the nation's food supply.

Germans for United States Army.

[Minneapolis Tribune:] Capt. Joseph Burger, No. 771 East Fourth street, St. Paul, a veteran of the Second Minnesota, which took Missionary Ridge in the Civil War, yesterday tendered to Gov. Burnquist the services of 1000 men between the ages of 18 and 25 years, and all of whom are of German parentage, for service in the event the United States becomes involved in war.

"In this manner will be refuted the too frequent charge that the Americans of German parentage would not stand by the American flag in the event of hostilities," the offer reads. "This, in my estimation, not only tends to show, but absolutely proves, that the German-American element of Minnesota, at least, is as loyal to the flag of the United States as they were in the 'days of '61.'"

Capt. Burger says his men are ready to respond on forty-eight hours' notice.

Nelson dramatic feature, "The Beautiful Lie."

Miss Barrymore, in "The Call of Her People," plays the role of Egypt, a spirited, care-free Gypsy girl. The picture is woven around the life of a roving tribe and the reversion of a girl who has been subjected to the refining influences of society to her original haunts and mode of life.

Miller's.

"The Slave," declared the most sensational feature in which Valeska Suratt has ever appeared, is the offering at Miller's Theater to start today. The photoplay was directed by William Nigh, and the star is supported by a fine cast, including Violet Palmer, Eris Mayne, Dan Mason, Herbert Heyes, Tom Brooke, Edwin Roseman and Martin Faust.

The added attraction is a new O. Henry story called "The Cop and the Anthem," a comedy that is said to contain a vast deal of human nature.

Alhambra.

If "a clash of wills" is necessary to good drama, then "Unconquered," in which Fannie Ward appears at the Alhambra this week, is most probably a good drama, for its title suggests the flash of blue steel, and the iron of character.

The story was written especially for Miss Ward by Beatrice C. de Mille and Leighton Osman, and was produced for the Lasky company by Frank Reicher. In support of the star are Hobart Bosworth, Jack Dean, Mabel Van Buren, Jane Wolfe, Billy Jacobs and Tully Marshall.

An added attraction at the Alhambra this week is a Flora Finch comedy, burlesquing "War Brides."

Superba.

An opportunity to do homage to the memory of Henrik Ibsen, the greatest recent contributor to the evolution in dramatic art, will be given to Los Angeles theater-goers this week at the Superba Theater. Dorothy Phillips, Lon Chaney and William Stowell will be featured in a filmization of "A Doll's House," one of the most widely-discussed plays ever written by the famous Norwegian.

An additional attraction will be an Elko comedy called "Roped into Scandal," and the new Superba manager, Al Nathan, will present for the first time his "jass" band.

Garrick.

"Fatty" Arbuckle is always reckless; that's a part of his nature, as well as the biggest asset in his vocation (and here's hoping he will not sue The Times for libel) but in "A Reckless Romeo," at the Garrick this week, Mr. Arbuckle—beg pardon, "Fatty"—is said to be "reckless-er" than he has ever been before. Arbuckle's accomplice is Al St. John, who will act like anything but a saint in this deep, dark drama.

The real dramatic feature for the week is "Like Wildfire," featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Neva Gerber.

Palace.

Of especial interest to women, young and old, is the attraction at the Palace, to open today. The photoplay, which is called "Maternity," and in which Alice Brady is featured, is said to be a powerful drama dealing with the theme of motherhood in general and telling the story of a young woman who was afraid to become a mother.

Another delightful Christie comedy, "A Lucky Slip," with Margaret Gibson, Neal Burns and Eddie Barry, brightens the programme.

INGENUES' RAPID ASCENT.

She's Been Soaring High Ever Since Little Eva Days.

Nancy Fair is the name of an ingenue who will make her first appearance at the Morosco Theater next week in "Stop Thief."

Although this is but her third season on the stage, the young woman is said to have had a rise that has seldom been paralelled. On her advent into vaudeville in New York she made an instant success with her character impersonations of the stars in current plays. Her first starring vehicle was in "Twin Beds," in New York and Chicago.

Miss Fair began her career as Little Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and as Editha in "Editha's Burglar."

"I remember I was so little," said Miss Fair, "when I played Little Eva that I cried when I did the 'ascent-to-heaven' scene for the first time, because instead of getting off the cloud in heaven I was lifted off into the dusty old loft of the theater."

AMID GIANT REDWOODS.

New Pickford Picture has Many Touches of the Real.

"A Romance of the Redwoods" will be the next offering in which Mary Pickford will appear. This picture was directed by Cecil B. de Mille and is said to possess wondrous charm.

The story has to do with the adventures of Jenny Lawrence, a New England miss, who is suddenly thrust into the midst of one of the wildest California mining towns in the days of '49. How she falls in love with a road agent, and by a clever ruse saves his life from the hands of a vigilance committee, forms the chief interest of the tale.

Many of the scenes were taken in the famous forest of gigantic redwood trees in Northern California. The incidents of the mining camps of Strawberry Flats were photographed under the auspices of members of the California Pioneer Society, and not a few of the persons appearing in the scenes actually took part in the gold rush.

SORCERY IN KOREA.

Folks Believe the World is Full of Malevolent Beings and Mediators are Required to Save the People from Their Machinations.

[Pittsburgh Gazette Times:] To the natives of Korea the world is populous with active and malevolent beings who are ready at any moment to fall upon them in wrath, according to a statement made by Dr. I. M. Casanowicz, assistant curator of Old World archeology of the United States National Museum at Washington, concerning the paraphernalia of a Korean sorceress now deposited in the museum collections.

Dr. Cassanowicz says the Koreans believe that these beings or spirits haunt every tree, mountain and water course; are on every roof, fireplace and beam, and infest even their chimneys, living rooms and kitchens; that they beset them at home and waylay them when abroad. They seem to be everywhere at all times and make their lives miserable.

To their influence the Koreans attribute every ill, all bad luck, official malevolence, loss of power or position, and especially sickness. The natives divide these countless legions of spirits into two main classes: Demons, consisting of self-existent malicious spirits and spirits of departed impoverished persons who died in distress, and spirits whose natures are partly kindly, which include the ghosts of prosperous and good people, but even the latter appear to be easily offended and extraordinarily capricious.

To cope with these two forms of spirits and be assured of a little peace and quiet, the Koreans have two classes of sorcerers, or, as they call them, "shamans;" the Pansu and the Mutang. Both classes are mediators between the people and the spirits, but they bear little relation to each other. The former are "fortune tellers," and the latter the "deceiving crowd," or "bad lot." In this connection Dr. Cassanowicz said:

"The office of the Pansu is restricted to blind men, perhaps owing to the common belief among primitive people that those who have been deprived of physical sight have been given an inner spiritual vision. The Mutang is always a woman, generally from the lower classes, and of bad repute, and her calling is considered the very lowest in the social scale. While the Pansu is, as it were, born or made by dint of his loss of eyesight, the Mutang enters upon her office in consequence of a 'supernatural call,' consisting in the assurance of demoniacal possession, the demon being supposed to have become her double and to have superimposed his personality upon hers. The 'possession' is often accompanied by hysterical and pathological symptoms.

"The spirit may seize any woman, maid or wife, rich or poor, plebeian or patrician, and compel her to serve him, and on receiving the 'call of the spirit' a woman will break every tie of custom and relationship, leave home and family to become henceforth a social outcast, so that she is not even allowed to live within the city walls. But notwithstanding her low social status her services are in constant demand. In traveling thrdough the country the Mutang or sorceress is constantly to be seen going thrdough the various musical and dancing performances in the midst of a crowd in front of a house where there is sickness. And at the close of the nineteenth century the fees annually paid in Korea to the sorcerers were estimated at $750,000.

"The Pansu acts as master of the spirits, having gained by his potent formulae and ritual an ascendancy over them. By his spells he can direct them, drive them out and even bury them. The Mutang is supposed to be able to influence them with her friendship with them. She has to pray to them and coax them to go. By her performances she puts herself en rapport with the spirits and is able to ascertain their will and to name the ransom for which they will release the victim who is under torment.

"More varied than the functions of the Pansu are the pacifications and propitiations, called kauts or kuts, performed by the Mutang. The kaut may be carried out either at the house of the patient or at the home of the Mutang, or at some shrine or temple, called tang, dedicated to some spirits, which are seen on the hillside in Korea. If, as is occasionally the case, the Mutang belongs to a noble family, she is allowed by her family to ply her trade only in her own house. Those who require her services send the required fee and necessary offerings, and the ceremony is performed by the Mutang in her own house or at the tang.

"Her equipment consists of a number of dresses, some of them very costly; a drum, shaped like an hourglass, about four feet high; copper cymbals, a copper gong, a copper rod with small bells or tinklers suspended from it by copper chains, a pair of telescoping baskets, strips of silk and paper banners which float around her as she dances; fans, umbrellas, wands and images of men and animals."

BACONIAN CIPHERS.

Decipherers Are Guilty of Three Weaknesses, Says Expert Student.

[Frederick E. Pierce in Yale Review:] Some time ago the present writer made an exhaustive study of a now safely interred cipher. For weeks he turned his back on the beauty of landscapes, the charm of humanity, and the inspiration of poetry. For weeks he underlined capital and small letters, made mathematical calculations connected with no human need, and filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat. He destroyed the cipher, and nearly destroyed the poery in his own soul.

From that dreary experience he draws two lessons for the public: that such labor is a desecration of any mind made in the image of God; and that all Baconian decipherers have three common weaknesses which mark their work immediately as spurious.

The first of these weaknesses is that the decipherer is like a card-player who continually changes the rules of the game to suit himself after looking at his hand. He is bringing in constantly little variations of method that carry him safely over what would otherwise be an insurmountable obstacle. Whether it be some new way of spelling Bacon's name in the string cipher of Mr. Booth, or some new way of

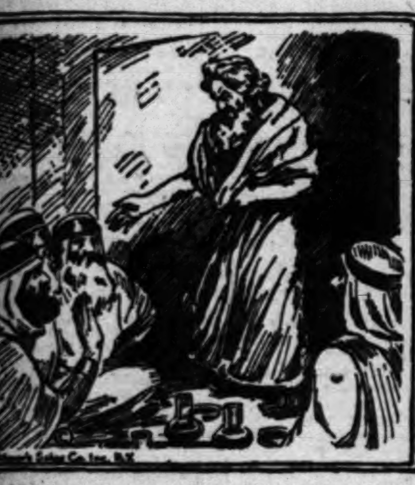
BIBLE PICTURE QUERY—3

By Whom and Under What Circumstances Was the First Temperance Society Formed?



Curious and Unusual Bible Questions

Look at the picture above, then turn to your Bible and find the answer to the question. The picture illustrates the verse in which the answer will be found.

Each week we will publish an illustrated question from the Bible and the following week publish the answer. See if you can find the answer before we publish it!

Make a family pastime of this interesting feature—it will amuse and instruct you.

Last Week's Question and the Answer

Last week's query: "What woman in the Bible refused to leave her mother-in-law?", was illustrated by a picture showing Ruth clinging to Naomi, her mother-in-law, while Orpah, the other daughter-in-law, was on her way back. The answer is found in the book of Ruth, Chapter I, Verse 16:

> "And Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."

ANIMAL AND INSECT ENEMIES CAN BE CHECKED.

Poison will be Used to Combat [illegible] Campaign of Destruction Waged on Crops—Specialists Prepared to Take Effective Preventive Measures.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Animal [illegible] pests of corn—prairie [illegible] ground squirrels, gophers, [illegible] crows, cutworms, ear[illegible] wireworms, chinch bugs, [illegible]—soon will open their campaigns of destruction. [illegible] of these pests can be effective[illegible] according to specialists of the United States Department of [illegible], who describe measures that may be employed.

For cutworms, lumps of poisoned [illegible] made by mixing about fifty [illegible] of bran or corn meal with [illegible] of Paris green, six fine[illegible] oranges or lemons, and [illegible] cheap molasses to make a dough, should be scattered [illegible] the corn rows at planting time [illegible] as injury from cutworms [illegible]. TEXTILE WORKERS USING GARDENS.

THEY ARE HELPING TO INCREASE FOOD SUPPLY.

The Average Saving from Small Plots is Thirty Dollars and the Chickens, Pigs and Cows are Reducing Living Expenses in North and South Carolina.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON, May 13.—How hundreds of people in the various textile mill towns of North and South Carolina are prepared "to do their bit" toward increasing the food supply by successful gardening is told by investigators of the Department of Agriculture, who have found that each of 548 families raised on an average $30 worth of food in gardens containing only about .15 of an acre and with an average total cost of labor and fertilizer of $3.54. Chickens, pigs and cows are often kept by the people to good advantage. In these textile mill towns, it is stated, small scale gardening has been encouraged for a number of years by the mill owners, and has been found profitable by the mill workers. The plan has resulted in local retail prices for garden truck which are only one-third to one-fourth that of present prices in other places. As a consequence the amount of food raised on each garden is considerably in excess of what could be purchased elsewhere for $30.

The mill companies, it is explained, furnish their employees with a house and plot of land at a very small rent. The people are helped to make themselves selfsustaining as far as possible. One company employs an expert to demonstrate the best methods for growing the products best adapted to the region.

Success in gardening, it was found, depended entirely upon the industry of the workers. Some families failed to give their gardens the proper amount of attention, and raised correspondingly poor crops. Others who were more industrious, greatly exceeded the average amount of food produced.

Where chickens were kept they were found to yield an average net return of $1.08 a fowl. Pigs also were profitable, but were not so numerous. Many of the people have cows. One mill owner puts a purebred bull at the disposal of his employees who own cows, and is building up the grade of cattle in this way. Tracts of land for community pasturage are common.

BAGDAD'S FERTILITY.

American Consul at Melbourne Praises Asiatic City.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

MELBOURNE (Australia) April 15.—Speaking of the capture of Bagdad by the British, William C. Magelssen, the United States Consul here, said:

"The country surrounding Bagdad would grow anything if there were any water. Once upon a time those parts provided grain for the world."

Mr. Magelssen established the United States Consulate at Bagdad and he was stationed there from 1906 to 1909.

"When I was there," he continued, "Sir William Wilcox, the irrigation expert, made a survey of the country. The Turkish government desired to retain his services for an irrigation scheme, but he did not accept the offer. He considered that the Turkish coffers would not stand the strain of providing for the project he had in view."

Wise Move.

"PLANT CORN," IS FARMERS' MOTTO.

THIS WILL REMEDY POSSIBLE WHEAT SHORTAGE.

In the Sections Suited to the Crop the Department of Agriculture Advises Immediate Recognition of the Value of this Grain as Human Food.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The most effective way to remedy the probable shortage in the wheat crop is to plant corn, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

Ordinarily the quantity of corn produced in the United States is from three to four times the quantity of wheat, but only a very small portion of the crop—from 5 to 10 per cent.—has been used for human food. This amount may be estimated in normal times at about 200,000,000 bushels a year. Not over 5 per cent. has been exported in peace times. A relatively slight increase in the corn acreage, therefore, will place many millions of bushels more of human food at the disposal of the world without interfering in any way with the feed needed for the support of live stock.

In the past, with an abundance of grain of other kinds, corn has not been in great demand for human consumption. But with other grains no longer abundant, circumstances will compel more general recognition of the value of corn as human food. The department is urging strongly the wider use of corn in the diet. It is the best substitute for wheat that we have and can be utilized in breads, mushes and a variety of other ways. We should make every effort to avail ourselves of it.

"Plant corn," then, should be the motto of every farmer in a section suited to the crop.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

MEXICO CITY, May 8.—The labor unions of Mexico are preparing to forward efforts to arrange an international congress of workmen of the United States, Central and South America, to discuss affairs affecting the workingmen of this continent and to establish the attitude they will take in the great world question of the present time. The Mexican unions hope to arrange for the congress to meet in Mexico.

New Zealand.

TAKES GREAT PRIDE IN ENLISTMENTS.

ISLAND'S CONTRIBUTION IN MEN SHOWS PATRIOTISM.

Official Figures Claim that in Proportion to the Population More Soldiers Have been Furnished for War than in Most Parts of the British Empire.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

WELLINGTON (New Zealand) April 13.—New Zealand claims the distinction of having contributed more men for the war in proportion to the population than any other part of the British Empire except England and Scotland.

Official figures show that New Zealand's contribution to the British Empire's military forces has been 80,593 men, out of a population of 1,160,000, or one in thirteen. More than 10,000 horses have been sent to the front by this dominion.

Under the Military Service Act, a measure providing for compulsory service to supplement the volunteers, the first reserve, consisting of single men and men who married after May, 1915, will be exhausted about April next. The second reserve, consisting wholly of married men, will then be drawn upon.

Col. James Allen, the Minister of Defense, said lately of the working of the act:

"New Zealand reinforcements have gone forward without a break at the strength arranged with the imperial authorities. There has been no omission, no check, no alteration."

It is admitted that the antiwar influence of the Industrial Workers of the World is constantly operative, but it is explained that this is not extensive. All New Zealand residents who made seditious statements or statements prejudicial to recruiting are summarily jailed. Voluntary recruiting still is active, and the proportion of volunteers in the latest reinforcements is large.

Tampico.

MEXICO TO GET BIG REVENUE FROM OIL.

INCREASED TAX WILL REALIZE FOUR MILLIONS GOLD.

Except for Enormous Production Operators Would be Unable to Bear Heavy Burden and Even Foreign Companies are not Exempt from Export Taxes.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

TAMPICO (Mex.) May 20.—It is conservatively estimated that the Mexican government will derive a total revenue of not less than $4,000,000 gold from the increased tax on oil and oil products which went into effect on May 1. That the export tax of 11 cents per barrel is oppressive and largely confiscatory is evident in view of the fact that the average price of crude oil is around 60 cents per barrel. Besides this export tax of 11 cents per barrel there are various other government and other charges gainst the product from the time it leaves the well until it is placed on board tank steamers that reduces the net profit to a very small sum per barrel, it is claimed. But for the fact that most of the wells in the Tampico fields are of enormous production the operators would be unable to bear the heavy tax burden. Some of the larger companies, both American and British, which obtained concessions for oil exploitations during the administration of the late President Porfirio Diaz were granted exemptions from all export taxes for a period of fifty years as one of the provisions of their contract with the government. Notwithstanding this plain letter of the contract the present central government is enforcing the collection of the excessive export tax from these companies. Payment of same is made under protest, and a careful record is kept of all amounts so paid, and these will form the basis for claims against the government by the different companies, it is stated.

The government has also levied and is enforcing the collection of a tax of 1 cent per gallon on crude gasoline and of ½ cent per gallon on refined gasoline that is exported. The gasoline export business through Tampico is increasing constantly, due to the establishment of additional topping plants and the full operation of the large refineries.

FOR ECONOMIC RELATIONS.

Japanese Leaders will Promote Feeling with America.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

OSAKA (Japan) April 26.—Establishment of closer economic relations between Japan and the United States in order to solve the political questions pending between the two countries is the object of the present Japanese Premier, Count Terauchi, and his Cabinet, declared K. Shoda, the Japanese Minister of Finance, in an address recently delivered before the bankers of Southern Japan.

This purpose of the Japanese statesmen, he declared, was particularly true as applied to the co-operation of the United States and Japan in dealing with Chinese affairs. Minister Shoda explained that Japan had taken the initiative in the project to induce the United States to join the new loan agreement in China and that the efforts of the government had, in a general way, improved American feelings toward this country.

"American capitalists," he said, are now willing to shake hands with Japanese business men in the economic development of the Far East."

The Underwear Salon on the Third Floor has never been so attractively well stocked. 'Most every corner of the Globe has been searched in order to find the just right materials with which to make the Lingerie.

SOFT, exquisite, delightfully shimmering Silks, Satins and Crepes are made into distracting creations which are priced especially for this June Sale.

COTTON things, too, just as fascinating in their own manner—Nainsooks, Batistes and Muslins. Made by past masters in the art, skillfully designed, generously yet accurately cut and most attractively priced.

FRENCH and Philippine Hand Made Garments, just the most charming kinds imaginable that fairly breathe the atmosphere in which they are made. These, too, are priced lower than usual.

But then—description matters little, if the prices are fair, JUDGE FOR YOURSELF.

BEAT DESERT IN STRUGGLE.

Enterprising Settlers Win in Fremont Valley.

Many Sections of Land Put Under Cultivation.

Dogs and Bells Help to Keep Wild Animals Away.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CANTIL, June 2.—Enterprising settlers are winning out in the Fremont Valley, which a few years ago was a barren desert. The territory, which lies adjacent to the "Jawbone" line of the Southern Pacific, is coming ahead in agriculture, cattle and goat raising. The reclamation of this section has had to be contested inch by inch against the lack of water, hot, dry winds, and the ravages of coyotes, rattlesnakes and jack rabbits.

Among the men having faith in the future of this region, and who are aiding its development against these difficulties is Fred Hartsook of Los Angeles, who owns six sections of former school and railroad land, and is getting the greater portion ready for cattle pasture. He also has a seventy-horse-power tractor putting one section in shape for agricultural purposes, which means he will protect the entire section with many miles of four-wire rabbit-proof fence.

Mr. Hartsook is drilling his third well and expects to strike artesian water at 800 feet. He is shipping a large number of registered thoroughbred cattle and goats, and has great faith in the dairying and Swiss cheese industry of the country. Among the many evidences of his diverse interests in the life of the community was his recent gift of a $1000 piano to the Redrock schoolhouse, and his personal supervision of the refurnishing of the building.

John Casson is making a success with poultry, and has trained dogs to keep the coyotes away. In case the dogs are put out of commission by rattlers he keeps watch with his gun, illustrating the necessity of eternal vigilance.

BELL KEEPS OFF COYOTES.

Among those specializing in goats is E. W. Pritchett. He has a large number of Toggenburg milch goats and is netting a good profit from milk, butter and cheese, and from the sale of animals. He has not lost any from coyotes, although they wander at will in the brush, and he attributes their safety largely to the bell on the neck of the leader.

The Cruikshank Bros., bankers of Santa Ana, own and control hundreds of acres around Cantil. They, with others, have already proven successful in growing fruits, citrus excepted, and have immense fruit orchards and vineyards under cultivation. They have planted large sections to diversified crops and are using wells for irrigation. There are some fifty wells, but some people are succeeding with dry farming, and the experimental acres of wheat, oats and sugar beets show great promise. The beet industry is of especial interest to the Cruikshanks, since they are interested in a large sugar-beet concern. Their model ranch has up-to-date cattle, large barns for the storage of crops, steam tractor plows, and the water from their artesian well flows a steady stream as big as a barrel day and night.

J. G. Blaylock has bearing orchards and now has 8000 young fruit trees started. He is also demonstrating the success of sugar beets, alfalfa, sweet potatoes and watermelons. Mr. Conklin is making a succes along diversified lines with dry farming.

Another interesting and successful man is "Cy" Townsend, formerly of the Chicago White Stockings ball club. "Cy" has a large number of fine-looking fruit trees planted in April, also a rabbit-proof fence and grayhounds. He not only goes in for everything that any one else is trying, but has organized a flourishing baseball league, and wouldn't live anywhere else in the world, he says.

SOME PIONEERS.

Among the pioneers whose success gave faith and courage to later settlers is the Muncy family and the people of the valley, while welcoming any sign of progress and prosperity, regret that the Muncy home, a pioneer landmark, is to go. It is being replaced with a modern house, similar to many of the up-to-date residences of the section. The Muncy-Hartsook cattle roundup for branding purposes that took place recently was participated in by fourteen cowboys and the last day was given over to a celebration that attracted wide interest.

Among those who see a future for mining in the district is W. M. Van Dyke, who is tunneling through a half dozen ledges in the Redrock Canyon. Capital is already interested.

Origin of the Khaki Uniform.

[Philadelphia Public Ledger:] Although an individual British regiment had worn it a decade before, the khaki uniform first appeared in war during the Indian Mutiny just sixty years ago.

Khaki is a product of India and "khak" means dust. The Tommies wore scarlet in the Crimea, and it was there "Bull Run" Russell, a London Times correspondent, coined the phrase, "a thin red line."

In no other great war were the uniforms of all armies so much alike as in the present one. The game now is to wear something that is not gaudy and will not show the marks of rough wear.

In Napoleon's day soldiers still charged to their death in those mountainous bearskin topped helmets which we now admire so much upon the heads of our First City Troop.

Grasshoppers at Sea.

[Scientific American:] The master of the Norwegian bark Robert Scrafton, bound from Liverpool to Pensacola, recently encountered a swarm of grasshoppers when about 1200 miles from the African coast—the nearest land. A specimen insect was forwarded, through the Weather Bureau, to the United States Bureau of Entomology, where it was pronounced to be Schistocerca tartarica. This species is a powerful flier, and has been taken far at sea on previous occasions. In the present case its flight was evidently aided by the steady northeast trade winds.

Figures of the War.

[Indianapolis News:] Fred Stritter, Recorder of Vanderburg county, Indiana, has been doing a little figuring on the European war. He finds that the Allies could raise an army of 37,369,705 men, figuring their capacity on a percentage basis of population. The combined population of the nations fighting under the Allied flags is 1,085,373,645. Combined population of the nations fighting under the German flag is 145, 397,648. The population of the United States is figured at 110,000,000, and its military capacity is placed at 10,000,000 or 11,000,000.

A Balance Due Him.

[Boston Transcript:] Mother: Well, for mercy sake! Here you are at the jam again. Didn't I whip you for that an hour ago?

Tommy: Yes, Ma; but I heard you tell Aunt Jane you thought you'd whipped me too hard, so I thought I'd make it even.

THE LAST DREAM OF ATTILA.

From the wild Carpathian passes the wind of the dusk blew down,
And the woven leaves of the oak trees, that seemed as a crimson crown
For the crestward sweep of the mountains were tangled and tossed and swirled
Till they burned like a second sunset o'er the breadth of the brooding world.

And the wind of the dusk made murmur round the palace doors of the king,
All else held the seal of silence as tense as a muted string,
For the monarch was sunk in slumber, and woe to the reckless one
Who roused from his visions of conquest grim Attila, the Hun!

Then a voice cried out from a chamber where the air hung heavy with musk,
Then a voice cried out through the stillness above the wind of the dusk:
"Bring wine! bring wine!" and a beaker was brimmed with the juice of the sun,
And borne by the maid Ildico to Attila
the Hun.

She was his latest handmaid, supple, and fair of face
As the bloom of the oleander seen in the vales of Thrace;
She was his latest handmaid, and past the cedarn doors,
Bolted with bronze, and over heaped rugs upon earthen floors,
With the tread of the fawn of the forest, she bore the beaker in To the scourge of God's trembling nations sprawled on a leopard skin.

Brown that bulked like a bastion above rolling eyes half bleared; Sinewy hands and hairy that clutched at a scrawny beard.
Lips that were gross and flaccid,
murmuring, muttering,
Body of brawn relaxed, such was this brute of a king!
And he raised the swimming chalice and he drained it to the lees,
While the light of mirth and malice faded by slow degrees
From his turbulent, tawny features, as fades day's dying gleam,
And he spake to the maid Ildico out of his drunken dream:

"I was the one appointed to sear with sanguine scars;
I was the one anointed, and girt with the sword of Mars.
I ranged, with my gory vanguard,
from the Volga to the Rhine,
And the rumor of my ravage shook the wall of Constantine.
I was a tide of terror from the Black to the Baltic Sea,
And the tramp of my hosts of triumph rocked the plains of Lombardy.
Aquileia and Concordia, I ground into ashes and dust,
And the blood of the Paduan people in my wine press was as must;
But, howsoe'er he may vanquish, man's day will have its close,
And the darkness gather about him,
the night no mortal knows.
I feel the clutch of the shadows about me coil and creep,
The folds of a power supernal that shall wrap me in endless sleep.
But out of the gloom there rises,
like the sun in the morning sky,
A king who shall come hereafter, one far greater than I;
For where I spared he shall slaughter, and where I saved he shall slay;
His deeds shall kindle the darkness;
his doom shall blacken the day;
But I shall share in his glory, his name shall be linked with mine,
And go down through all the ages
as a symbol and a sign!"

Then the fair handmaid Ildico slipped out as she slipped in,
Leaving the scourge of the nations sprawled on his leopard skin
Where, stark in death, they found him when the darkness had withdrawn,
And down from the mountain passes stole in the wind of the dawn.
Then there wavered the sound of wailing far over moor and weald,
And they bore the bulk of his body forth on a massy shield;
And they shaped for his clay a casket of iron and silver and gold,
And they set in his clenched fingers
the sword of Mars to hold;
And for sculpture they fashioned a grave that was deep and wide,
Heaped with the sack of cities, of many a kingdom side;
And score upon score of captives
they slew, lest he alone Fare in to the outer vastness into the great unknown!

And that was the end of horror,
aye, that was the end of dread!
Yet we today remember the prophecy of the dead.
There are wings as the wings of vultures sweeping athwart the sun,
And the world knows anew the menace of Attila the Hun!

FORT SAM HOUSTON A TRAINING BEEHIVE

TO BE SCENE OF EXTENSIVE ARMY OPERATIONS.

Military Camp will Dot Immediate Territory as Orders Have Already been Given for Construction of Living Quarters, and Troops will be Moved In.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

FORT SAM HOUSTON (Tex.) May 29.—It is now assured that for an indefinite length of time Fort Sam Houston and the immediate territory that is available for military camp sites will be the scene of the most extensive army training operations that were ever conducted in this country. Besides the officers' training camp at Leon Springs, now officially known as Camp Funston, there is to be established there as soon as the plans can be carried out one of the largest training camps for reserve officers in the United States. In order to provide living quarters and other accommodations for these men, many additional cantonments or barracks will be erected. Orders have already been given for the construction of these several buildings, and the troops will be moved in with all possible dispatch.

It also is announced that the Seventh Field Artillery, which is now stationed at Camp Wilson, a part of the Fort Sam Houston reservation, will be sent to Leon Springs, and from this organization three regiments of field artillery will be formed, to be known as the Seventh,

PENROD AND SAM.—BY BOOTH TARKINGTON.

THE MILITARIST.

PENROD SCHOFIELD, having been "kept in" for the unjust period of twenty minutes after school, emerged to a deserted street. That is, the street was deserted so far as Penrod was concerned. Here and there people were to be seen upon the sidewalks, but they were adults, and they and the shade trees had about the same quality of significance in Penrod's consciousness. Usually he saw grown people in the mass, which is to say, they were virtually invisible to him, though exceptions must be taken in favor of policemen, firemen, street-car conductors, motormen and all other men in any sort of uniform or regalia. But this afternoon none of these met the roving eye, and Penrod set out upon his homeward way wholly dependent upon his own resources.

To one of Penrod's inner texture, a mere unadorned walk from one point to another was intolerable, and he had not gone a block without achieving some slight remedy for the tameness of life. An electric light pole at the corner, invested with powers of observation, might have been surprised to find itself suddenly enacting a role of dubious honor in improvised melodrama. Penrod, approaching, gave the pole a look of sharp suspicion, then one of conviction: slapped it lightly and contemptuously with his open hand; passed on a few paces, but turned abruptly, and, pointing his right forefinger, uttered the symbolic word, "Bing!"

The plot was somewhat indefinite; yet nothing is more certain than that the electric light pole had first attempted something against him, then growing bitter when slapped, and stealing after him to take him treacherously in the back, had got itself shot through and through by one too old in such warfare to be caught off his guard.

Leaving the body lie where it was, he placed the smoking pistol in a holster in his saddlebow—he had decided he was mounted—and proceeded up the street. At intervals he indulged himself in other encounters, reining in at first suspicion of ambush with a muttered, "Whoa, Charlie!" or "Whoa, Mike!" or even "Whoa, Washington!" for preoccupation with the enemy outweighed attentions to the details of theatrical consistency, though the steed's varying names were at least harmoniously masculine, since a boy, in these creative moments, never rides a mare. And having brought Charlie or Mike or Washington to a standstill, Penrod would draw the sure weapon from its holster and—"Bing! Bing! Bing!"—let them have it.

It is not to be understood that this was a noisy performance, or even an obvious one. It attracted no attention from any pedestrian, and it was to be perceived only that a boy was proceeding up the street at a somewhat irregular gait. Three or four years earlier, when Penrod was 7 or 8, he would have shouted "Bing!" at the top of his voice; he would have galloped openly: all the world might have seen that he bestrode a charger. But a change had come upon him with advancing years. As though the grown people in sight were indeed to him as walking trees, his dramas were accomplished principally by suggestion and symbol. His "Whoas" and "Bings' were delivered in a husky whisper, and his equestrianism was established by action mostly of the mind, the accompanying artistry of the feet being unintelligent to the passer-by.

And yet, though he concealed from observation the stirring little scenes be thus enacted, love of realism was increasing within him. Early childhood is not fastidious about the accessories of its drama—a cane is vividly a gun which may instantly, as vividly, become a horse; but at Penrod's time of life the lath sword is no longer satisfactory. Indeed, he now had a vague sense that weapons of wood were unworthy to the point of being contemptible and ridiculous, and he employed them only when he was alone and unseen. For months a yearning had grown more and more poignant in his vitals, and this yearning was symbolized by one of his most profound secrets. In the inner pocket of his jacket he carried a bit of wood whittled into the distant likeness of a pistol, but not even Sam Williams had seen it. The wooden pistol never knew the light of day; save when Penrod was in solitude; and yet it never left his side except at night, when it was placed under his pillow. Still, it did not satisfy; it was but the token of his yearning and his dream. With all his might and main Penrod longed for one thing beyond all others. He wanted a Real Pistol!

That was natural. Pictures of real pistols being used to magnificently romantic effect were upon almost all the billboards in town, the year round; and as for the "movie" shows, they could not have lived an hour unpistoled. In the drug store, where Penrod bought his candy and soda when he was in funds, he would linger to turn the pages of periodicals whose illustrations were fascinating pistolic. Some of the magazines upon the very library table at home were sprinkled with pictures of people (usually in evening clothes) pointing pistols at other people. Nay, the library board of the town had emitted a "Selected List of Fifteen Books for Boys," and Penrod had read fourteen of them with pleasure, but as the fifteenth contained no weapons in earlier chapters and held forth little prospect of any shooting at all, he abandoned it halfway and read the most sanguinary of the other fourteen over again. So, the daily food of his imagination being gun, what wonder that he thirsted for the Real!

He passed from the sidewalk into his own yard, with a subdued "Bing!" inflicted upon the stolid person of a gatepost, and, entering the house through the kitchen, ceased to bing for a time. However, driven back from the fore part of the house by a dismal sound of callers, he returned to the kitchen and sat down.

"Della," he said to the cook, "do you know what I'd do if you was a crook and I had my ottomatic with me?"

Della was industrious and preoccupied. "If I was a cook!" she repeated ignorantly, and with no cordiality. "Well, I am a cook. I'm a-cookin' right now. Either g'wan in the house y'b'long, or git out in th' yard!"

Penrod chose the latter, and betook himself slowly to the back fence, where he was greeted in a boisterous manner by his wistful little old dog Duke, returning from some affair of his own in the alley.

"Get down!" said Penrod coldly, and bestowed a spiritless "Bing!" upon him.

At this moment a shout was heard from the alley, "Yay, Penrod!" and the sandy head of Comrade Sam Williams appeared above the fence.

"Come on over," said Penrod.

As Sam obediently climbed the fence the little old dog Duke moved slowly away, but presently, glancing backing over his shoulder and seeing the two boys standing together, he broke into a trot and disappeared round a corner of the house. He was a dog of long and enlightening experience; and he made it clear that the conjunction of Penrod and Sam portended events which, from his point of view, might be unfortunate. Duke had a forgiving disposition, but he also possessed a melancholy wisdom. In the company of Penrod or Sam, alone, affection often caused him to linger, albeit with a little pessimism, but when he saw them together he invariably withdrew in as unobtrusive a manner as haste would allow.

"What you doin'?" Sam asked.

"Nothin'. What you?"

"I'll show you if you'll come over to our house," said Sam, who was wearing an important and secretive expression.

"What for?" Penrod showed little interest.

"Well, I said I'd show you if you came on over, didn't I?"

"But you haven't got anything I haven't got," said Penrod indifferently. "I know everything that's in your yard and in your stable, and there isn't a thing——"

"I didn't say it was in the yard or in the stable, did I?"

"Well, there ain't anything in your house," returned Penrod frankly, "that I'd walk two feet to look at—not a thing!"

"Oh, no!" Sam assumed mockery. "Oh, no, you wouldn't! You know what it is, don't you? Yes, you do!"

Penrod's curiosity stirred somewhat.

"Well, all right," he said, "I got nothin' to do. I just as soon go. What is it?"

"You wait and see," said Sam, as they climbed the fence. "I bet your ole eyes'll open pretty far in about a minute or so!"

"I bet they don't. It takes a good deal to get me excited, unless it's sumpthing mighty——"

"You'll see!" Sam promised.

He opened an alley gate and stepped into his own yard in a manner signaling caution—though the exploit, thus far, certainly required none—and Penrod began to be impressed and hopeful. They entered the house, silently, encountering no one, and Sam led the way upstairs, tiptoeing, implying unusual and increasing peril. Turning, in the upper hall, they went into Sam's father's bedroom, and Sam closed the door with a caution so genuine that already Penrod's eyes began to fulfil his host's prediction. Adventures in another boy's house are trying to the nerves; and another boy's father's bedroom, when invaded, has a violated sanctity that is almost appalling. Penrod felt that something was about to happen—something much more important than he had anticipated.

Sam tiptoed across the room to a chest of drawers, and, kneeling, carefully pulled out the lowest drawer until the surface of its contents—Mr. Williams's winter underwear—lay exposed. Then he fumbled beneath the garments and drew forth a large object, displaying it triumphantly to the satisfactorily dumfounded Penrod.

It was a blue-steel Colt's revolver, of the heaviest pattern made in the Seventies. Mr. Williams had inherited it from Sam's grandfather (a small man, a deacon, and dyspeptic) and it was larger and more horrible than any revolver either of the boys had ever seen in any picture, moving or stationary. Moreover, greenish bullets of great size were to be seen in the chambers of the cylinder, suggesting massacre rather than mere murder. This revolver was Real and it was Loaded!

Both boys lived breathlessly through a magnificent moment.

"Leave me have it!" gasped Penrod. "Leave me have hold of it!"

"You wait a minute!" Sam protested, in a whisper. "I want to show you how I do."

"No; you let me show you how I do!" Penrod insisted; and they scuffled for possession.

"Look out!" Sam whispered warningly. "It might go off."

"Then you better leave me have it!" And Penrod, victorious and flushed, stepped back, the weapon in his grasp. "Here," he said, "this is the way I do: You be a crook; and suppose you got a dagger, and I——"

"I don't want any dagger," Sam protested, advancing. "I want that revolaver. It's my father's revolaver, ain't it?"

"Well, wait a minute, can't you? I got a right to show you the way I do, first, haven't I?" Penrod began an improvisation on the spot. "Say I'm comin' along after dark like this—look, Sam! And say you try to make a jump at me——"

"I won't!" Sam declined this role impatiently. "I guess it ain't your father's revolaver, is it?"

"Well, it may be your father's but it ain't yours," Penrod argued, becoming logical. "It ain't either's of us revolaver, so I got as much right——"

"You haven't either. It's my fath——"

"Watch, can't you—just a minute!" Penrod urged vehemently. "I'm not goin' to keep it, am I? You can have it when I get through, can't you? Here's how I do: I'm comin' along after dark, just walkin' along this way—like this—look, Sam!"

Penrod, suiting the action to the word, walked to the other end of the room, swinging the revolver at his side with affected carelessness.

"I'm just walkin' along like this, and first I don't see you," continued the actor. "Then I kind of get a notion sumpthing wrong's liable to happen, so I—— No!" He interrupted himself abruptly. "No; that isn't it. You wouldn't notice that I had my good ole revolaver with me. You wouldn't think I had one, because it'd be under my coat like this, and you wouldn't see it." Penrod stuck the muzzle of the pistol into the waistband of his knickerbockers at the left side and, buttoning his jacket, sustained the weapon in concealment by pressure of his elbow. "So you think I haven't got any; you think I'm just a man comin' along, and so you——"

Sam advanced. "Well, you've had your turn," he said. "Now, it's mine. I'm going to show you how I——"

"Watch me, can't you?" Penrod wailed. "I haven't showed you how I do, have I? My goodness! Can't you watch me a minute?"

"I have been! You said yourself it'd be my turn soon as you——"

"My goodness! Let me have a chance, can't you?" Penrod retreated to the wall, turning his right side toward Sam and keeping the revolver still protected under his coat. "I got to have my turn first, haven't I?"

"Well, yours is over long ago."

"It isn't either! I——"

"Anyway," said Sam decidedly, clutching him by the right shoulder and endeavoring to reach his left side—"anyway, I'm going to have it now."

"You said I could have my turn out!" Penrod, carried away by indignation, raised his voice.

"I did not!" Sam, likewise lost to caution, asserted his denial loudly.

"You did, too."

"You said——"

"I never said anything!"

"You said—— Quit that!"

"Boys!" Mrs. Williams, Sam's mother, opened the door of the room and stood upon the threshold. The scuffling of Sam and Penrod ceased instantly, and they stood hushed and stricken, while fear fell upon them. "Boys, you weren't quarreling, were you?"

"Ma'am?" said Sam.

"Were you quarreling with Penrod?"

"No, ma'am," answered Sam in a small voice.

"It sounded like it. What was the matter?"

Both boys returned her curious glance with meekness. They were summoning their faculties—which were needed. Indeed, these are the crises which prepare a boy for the business difficulties of his later life. Penrod, with the huge weapon beneath his jacket, insecurely supported by an elbow and by a waistband which he instantly began to distrust, experienced distressful sensations similar to those of the owner of too heavily insured property carrying a gasoline can under his overcoat and detained for conversation by a policeman. And if, in the coming years, it was to be Penrod's lot to find himself in that precise situation, no doubt he would be the better prepared for it on account of this present afternoon's experience under the scalding eye of Mrs. Williams. It should be added that Mrs. Williams's eye was awful to the imagination only. It was a gentle eye and but mildly curious, having no remote suspicion of the dreadful truth, for Sam had backed upon the chest of drawers and closed the damnatory open one with the calves of his legs.

Sam, not bearing the fatal evidence upon his person, was in a better state than Penrod, though when boys fall into the stillness now assumed by these two it should be understood that they are suffering. Penrod, in fact, was the prey to apprehension so keen that the actual pit of his stomach was cold.

Being the actual custodian of the crime, he understood that his case was several degrees more serious than that of Sam, who, in the event of detection would be convicted as only an accessory. It was a lesson, and Penrod already repented his selfishness in not allowing Sam to show how he did, first.

"You're sure you weren't quarreling, Sam?" said Mrs. Williams.

"No, ma'am; we were just talking."

Still she seemed dimly uneasy, and her eye swung to Penrod.

"What were you and Sam talking about, Penrod?"

"Ma'am?"

"What were you talking about?"

Penrod gulped invisibly.

"Well," he murmured, "it wasn't much. Different things."

"What things."

"Oh, just sumpthing. Different things."

"I'm glad you weren't quarreling," said Mrs. Williams, reassured by this reply, which, though somewhat baffling, was thoroughly familiar to her ear. "Now, if you'll come downstairs, I'll give you each one cookie and no more, so your appetites won't be spoiled for your dinners."

She stood, evidently expecting them to precede her. To linger might renew vague suspicion, causing it to become more definite; and boys preserve themselves from moment to moment, not often attempting to secure the future. Consequently, the apprehensive Sam and the unfortunate Penrod (with the monstrous implement bulking against his ribs) walked out of the room and down the stairs, their countenances indicating an interior condition of solemnity. And a curious shade of behavior might have here interested a criminologist. Penrod endeavored to keep as close to Sam as possible, like a lonely person seeking company, while, on the other hand, Sam kept moving away from Penrod, seeming to desire an appearance of aloofness.

"Go into the library, boys," said Mrs. Williams, as the three reached the foot of the stairs. "I'll bring you your cookies. Papa's in there."

Under her eye the two entered the library, to find Mr. Williams reading his evening paper. He loked up pleasantly, but it seemed to Penrod that he had an ominous and penetrating expression.

"What have you been up to, you boys?" inquired this enemy.

"Nothing," said Sam. "Different things."

"What like."

"Oh, just different things."

Mr. Williams nodded; then his glance rested casually upon Penrod.

"What's the matter with your arm, Penrod?"

Penrod became paler and Sam withdrew from him almost conspicuously.

"Sir?"

"I said, what's the matter with your arm?"

"Which one?" Penrod quavered.

"Your left. You seem to be holding it in an unnatural position. Have you hurt it?"

Penrod swallowed. "Yes, sir. A boy bit me—I mean a dog—a dog bit me."

Mr. Williams murmured sympathetically: "That's too bad! Where did he bite you?"

"On the—right on the elbow."

"Good gracious! Perhaps you ought to have it cauterized."

"Sir?"

"Did you have a doctor look at it?"

"No, sir. My mother put some stuff from the drug store on it."

"Oh, I see. Probably it's all right, then."

"Yes, sir." Penrod drew breath more freely, and accepted the warm cookie Mrs. Williams brought him. He ate it without relish.

"You can have only one apiece," she said. "It's too near dinner time. You needn't beg for any more, because you can't have 'em."

They were good about that; they were in no frame of digestion for cookies.

"Was it your own dog that bit you?" Mr. Williams inquired.

"Sir? No, sir. It wasn't Duke."

"Penrod!" Mrs. Williams exclaimed. "When did it happen?"

"I don't remember just when," he answered feebly. "I guess it was day before yesterday."

"Gracious! How did it—"

"He—he just came up and bit me."

"Why, that's terrible! It might be dangerous for other children," said Mrs. Williams, with a solicitous glance at Sam. "Don't you know whom he belongs to?"

"No'm. It was just a dog."

"You poor boy! Your mother must have been dreadfully frightened when you came home and she saw—"

She was interrupted by the entrance of a middle-aged colored woman. "Miz Williams," she began, and then, as she caught sight of Penrod, she addressed him directly, "You' ma telefoam if you here, send you home right away, 'cause they waitin' dinner on you."

"Run along, then," said Mrs. Williams, patting the visitor lightly upon his shoulder: and she accompanied him to the front door. "Tell your mother I'm so sorry about your getting bitten, and you must take good care of it, Penrod."

"Yes'm."

Penrod lingered helplessly outside the doorway, looking at Sam, who stood partially obscured in the hall behind Mrs. Williams. Penrod's eyes, with a veiled anguish, conveyed a pleading for help as well as a horror of the position in which he found himself. Sam, however, pale and determined, seemed to have assumed a stony attitude of detachment, as if it were well understood between them that his own comparative innocence was established, and that whatever catastrophe ensued Penrod had brought it on, and must bear the brunt of it alone.

"Well, you'd better run along, since they're waiting for you at home," said Mrs. Williams, closing the door. "Good night, Penrod."

. . . Ten minutes later Penrod took his place at his own dinner table, somewhat breathless but with an expression of perfect composure.

"Can't you ever come home without being telephoned for?" demanded his father.

"Yes, sir." And Penrod added reproachfully, placing the blame upon members of Mr. Schofield's own class, "Sam's mother and father kept me, or I'd been home long ago. They would keep on talkin', and I guess I had to be polite, didn't I?"

His left arm was as free as his right; there was no dreadful bulk beneath his jacket, and at Penrod's age the future is too far away to be worried about. The difference between temporary security and permanent security is left for grown people. To Penrod, security was security, and before his dinner was half eaten his spirit had become fairly serene.

Nevertheless, when he entered the empty carriage-house of the stable, on his return from school the next afternoon, his expression was not altogether without apprehension, and he stood in the doorway looking well about him before he lifted a loosened plank in the flooring and took from beneath it the grand old weapon of the Williams family. Not did his eye lighten with any pleasurable excitement as he sat himself down in a shadowy corner and began some sketchy experiments with the mechanism. The allure of first sight was gone. In Mr. Williams' bedchamber, with Sam clamoring for possession, it had seemed to Penrod that nothing in the world was so desirable as to have that revolver in his own hands—it was his dream come true. But, for reasons not definitely known to him, the charm had departed; he turned the cylinder gingerly, almost with distaste; and slowly there stole over him a feeling that there was something repellent and threatening in the heavy blue steel.

Thus does the long-dreamed Real misbehave—not only for Penrod!

More out of a sense of duty to bingism in general than for any other reason, he pointed the revolver at the lawn-mower, and gloomily murmured, "Bing!"

Simultaneously, a low and cautious voice sounded from the yard outside, "Yay, Penrod!" and Sam Williams darkened the doorway, his eye falling instantly upon the weapon in his friend's hand. Sam seemed relieved to see it.

"You didn't get caught with it, did you?" he said hastily.

Penrod shook his head, rising.

"I guess not! I guess I got some brains around me," he added, inspired by Sam's presence to assume a slight swagger. "They'd have to get up pretty early to find any good ole revolaver, once I got my hands on it!"

"I guess we can keep it, all right," Sam said confidentially. "Because this morning papa was putting on his winter underclothes and he found it wasn't there, and they looked all over and everywhere, and he was pretty mad, and said he knew it was those cheap plumbers stole it that mamma got instead of the regular plumbers he always used to have, and he said there wasn't any chance ever gettin' it back, 'cause you couldn't tell which one took it and they'd all swear it wasn't them. So it looks like we could keep it for our revolaver, Penrod, don't it? I'll give you half of it."

Penrod affected some enthusiasm. "Sam, we'll keep it out here in the stable."

"Yes, and we'll go huntin' with it. We'll do lots of things with it!" But Sam made no effort to take it, and neither boy seemed to feel yesterday's necessity to show the other how he did. "Wait till next Fourth o' July!" Sam continued. "Oh, oh! Look out!"

This incited a genuine spark from Penrod.

"Fourth o' July! I guess she'll be a little better than any firecrackers! Just a little 'Bing! Bing! Bing!' she'll be goin', 'Bing! Bing! Bing!'"

The suggestion of noise stirred his comrade. "I'll bet she'll go off louder'n that time the gas-works blew up! I wouldn't be afraid to shoot her off any time."

"I bet you would," said Penrod. "You aren't used to revolavers the way I——"

"You aren't, either!" Sam exclaimed promptly. "I wouldn't be any more afraid to shoot her off than you would."

"You would, too!"

"I would not!"

"Well, let's see you then; you talk so much!" And Penrod handed the weapon scornfully to Sam, who at once became less self-assertive.

"I'd shoot her off in a minute," Sam said, "only it might break sumpthing if it hit it."

"Hold her up in the air, then. It can't hurt the roof, can it?"

Sam, with a desperate expression, lifted the revolver at arm's length. Both boys turned away their heads, and Penrod put his fingers in his ears—but nothing happened "What's the matter?" he demanded. "Why don't you go on if you're goin' to?"

Sam lowered his arm. "I guess I didn't have her cocked," he said apologetically, whereupon Penrod loudly jeered.

"Tryin' to shoot a revolaver and didn't know enough to cock her! If I didn't know any more about revolavers than that, I'd——"

"There!" Sam exclaimed, managing to draw back the hammer until two chilling clicks warranted his opinion that the pistol was now ready to perform its office. "I guess she'll do all right to suit you this time!"

"Well, why'n't you go ahead, then; you know so much!" And as Sam raised his arm, Penrod again turned away his head and placed his forefingers in his ears.

A pause followed.

"Why'n't you go ahead?"

Penrod, after waiting in keen suspense, turned to behold his friend standing with his right arm above his head, his left hand over his left ear, and both eyes closed.

"I can't pull the trigger," said Sam indistinctly, his face convulsed as in sympathy with the great muscular efforts of other parts of his body. "She won't pull!"

"She won't?" Penrod remarked with scorn. "I'll bet I could pull her."

Sam promptly opened his eyes and handed the weapon to Penrod.

"All right," he said, with surprising and unusual mildness. "You try her, then."

Inwardly discomfited to a disagreeable extent, Penrod attempted to talk his own misgivings out of countenance.

"Poor 'ittle baby!" he said, swinging the pistol at his side with a fair pretense of careless ease. "Ain't even strong enough to pull a trigger! Poor 'ittle baby! Well, if you can't even do that much, you better watch me while I——"

"Well," said Sam reasonably, "why don't you go on and do it then?"

"Well, I am goin' to, ain't I?"

"Well, then, why don't you?"

"Oh, I'll do it fast enough to suit you, I guess," Penrod retorted, swinging the big revolver up a little higher than his shoulder and pointint it in the direction of the double doors, which opened upon the alley. "You better run, Sam," he jeered. "You'll be pretty scared when I shoot her off, I guess."

"Well, why don't you see if I will? I bet you're afraid yourself."

"Oh, I am, am I?" said Penrod, in a reckless voice—and his finger touched the trigger. It seemed to him that his finger no more than touched it; perhaps he had been reassured by Sam's assertion that the trigger was difficult. His intentions must remain in doubt, and probably Penrod himself was not certain of them; but one thing comes to the surface as entirely definite—that trigger was not so hard to pull as Sam said it was.

Bang! Wh-a-a-ack! A shattering report split the air of the stable, and there was an orifice of remarkable diameter in the alley door. With those phenomena, three yells, expressing excitement of different kinds, were almost simultaneous—two from within the stable and the third from a point in the alley about eleven inches lower than the orifice just constructed in the planking of the door. This third point, roughly speaking, was the open mouth of a gayly dressed young colored man whose attention as he strolled, had been thus violently distracted from some mental computations he was making in numbers, including, particularly, those symbols of ectasy or woe, as the case might be, seven and eleven. His eye at once perceived the orifice on a line enervatingly little above the top of his head: and, although he had not supposed himself so well known in this neigh-

Two Reasons Why The Brunswick Phonograph Is Supreme!

REASON NO. 1 is that the BRUNSWICK PHONOGRAPH plays any record of any make. For this reason it is the choice of the music-lover who wants to hear all the great singers and players and who does not want to be restricted to the records made by one or two concerns. Thus the BRUNSWICK is "All Phonographs in One."

REASON NO. 2 is that the BRUNSWICK PHONOGRAPH plays all talking machine records better than has ever been done before. The hidden beauties of every record, frequently lost when played on ordinary machines, are brought out in the most exquisite manner through the "True to Nature" tone devices.

Hear the Brunswick Phonograph play your favorite record at this store — you will enjoy it.

THE WAR'S DIET LESSON —KNOW YOURSELF.

Scientific Co-operation is Now So Efficient That We May Pluck the Jewel of Health from the Adversities of Food Restriction.

BY J. MADISON TAYLOR, M.D.,
Professor of Applied Therapeutics, Medical Department, Temple University.

NO ONE will deny that, as a people, we regard this as a season of adversity in respect to the daily problem of getting enough to eat and it is but cold comfort to remark that our circumstances are liable to be more adverse before they become less. But if they serve the excellent purpose of enabling any considerable quota among us to pluck the jewel of health out of the food limitations we deplore, our dietary affairs may not be in a state quite so desperate as they seen.

If the average American who, when he does not overeat throughout the range of his food supply is inclined to go to excess in one or two particulars, will only try to rectify the beam in his own dietary eye before protesting against some mote or other that he detects in the good eyes of the nation's official food regulators, a situation unfortunate in the future can be wholly avoided. Both sides in Europe afford us instructive object lessons for our school.

There is absolutely no question but that the German people, up to the time where deprivation of the essential food elements definitely began, were benefited, by and largely, through the compulsory adjustment, on a basis more symmetrical than prevailed in peace time, of their appetites to their actual food needs because those actual food needs simply had to be adjusted to the available food supplies. There is little doubt that many classes among the population of Great Britain today would be benefited in health by some genuine restriction of the food intakes in which they indulge. Recent reports from London show that afternoon tea is still regarded as an indispensable fourth meal—one more than we, as a people, habitually consider and not warranted, even under English climatic conditions, in view of the great necessity for food regulation repeatedly and anxiously emphasized by the British government. For the Germans, they were accustomed to enjoy as many as five and six repasts during the twenty-four hours; the marvel is, not that they are surviving the food limitations imposed upon them by the Allied blockade, but that they had stomachs worth using before it began.

One of the most valuable lessons of this war is its direction of American attention to the plain and unpleasant fact that some measure of food limitation is required here. We must recognize our own needs as individuals; and the individual's needs vary according to several individual factors, such as: First, age; second, size; third, nature and quality of work performed, whether sedentary, active or laborious; fourth, conditions under which the individual lives, involving income, tastes, habits and other details of environment.

Here, at first glance of the great variety of factors bearing upon every individual regime, it becomes apparent that not all of us are qualified to decide for ourselves just what our food intakes ought to be. We must learn them, partly through counsel from those possessing expert knowledge and partly through counsel with our own best selves.

It will not be amiss, at this time, for every household to have a little, sensible confab with the family doctor, who is the one handy authority on the dietary requirements of all the individuals concerned.

Modern science, however, is in position to offer further and more dependable help. For some time past the hospitals of large American cities have been in course of organization on a co-operative basis, as have also physicians of the better class everywhere, for the collective study of medical problems applying to individual cases. Among all of these men it is recognized that nothing is more important than the subject of food, dietetics and metabolism—which includes the whole problem of food intake and energy output for our population. There are probably few localities where the family physician lacks now the co-operative facilities needed for a correct, thorough, scientific and practical study of every individual problem in his practice. It is his duty, as well as the duty of the head of every family, especially at this time, and under the pressure of existing circumstances, to take advantage of those facilities. The expense need not be prohibitive, or even large. A few extra dollars, spent now for some real skill and research in the planning of the table in true accord with the individual needs of any family, must mean hundreds gained in efficiency, health, and even money—through direct economies and an all around increase of earning capacity—in the present and the future.

THE RELIGIOUS RAMBLER.

Patriotic Work Planned for Endeavorers who Stay at Home. Marshaling Millions of Young People for the Increase of Food Products—Young Men for Army and Navy—Societies will Provide Special Religious Aids for Enlisted Men—New York Convention Cancelled.

IF ABILITY to seize the opportune moment for directing the activities of a large number of persons into important new channels means leadership, then Rev. Francis E. Clark, founder and president of the Christian Endeavor Society, is a real leader. With several million enthusiastic young men and women enrolled in the organization he has a unique place of power. And he has utilized it by proposing that all Endeavorers who cannot enlist in active military or naval service under the flag, should be enrolled in the "Christian Endeavor Army of Production and Food Economy."

Famous as a pledge-signing movement, Christian Endeavor has offered its members a special pledge for this work, as follows:

Some hundreds of prizes, ranging from $20 to $1, are offered for the Endeavorers who secure the largest agricultural results. Some prizes are for the produce raised on an acre—others for that raised on 400 square feet of ground.

ENDEAVOR WITH A HOE.

Quick and hearty response has followed this proposal of Dr. Clark. President Wilson has written in hearty commendation, as has also the Secretary og Agriculture, and many other public men. State and local officials of the elaborately-organized Christian Endeavor movement have taken up the idea heartily and individual pledge-signers are already enrolling. Dr. Clark himself has become a "garden patriot," at Sagamore Beach, Cape Cod, and Mrs. Clark has likewise.

President Wilson's letter, which has been published in the Christian Endeavor World, is as follows:

"I have your letter of April 18. I am glad to commend your efforts to increase the food production of the nation. The Endeavorers can be of much assistance not only in increasing production, but also in helping the farmers during the harvest season to harvest their crops. I hope that your call will meet with a general response.

"Might it not be well for you to issue a statement calling attention to the State agricultural agents who are actively promoting such work throughout the country? The names and addresses of these persons may be learned through the State agricultural colleges. They will be glad to give assistance in their respective districts.

"Cordially and sincerely yours."

National significance attaches itself to this Christian Endeavor movement for food production and conservation because the organization is not only widespread, reaching every part of the land, rural as well as metropolitan, but it is made up of members who are in the prime of enthusiasm, and physically equipped to do labor of the sort indicated. So, while tens of thousands of Endeavorers will carry guns, an even greater service in the national crisis will be rendered by this reserve army which will carry hoes and spades and rakes.

LINING UP THE WORLD.

The scheme, like the organization, is international in its scope. This means that it will carry the message of food conservation, with the drive of the religious impulse behind it, into Canada, Great Britain, Australasia, Scandinavia, and the Orient. Thus it becomes one added tie to intensify the solidarity and interdependence of nations.

Incidentally, this movement for garden patriotism is doing more to promote the simple life, and to preach the gospel of out-of-door exercise, than all the literary propaganda that has been conducted through the years.

Nobody may predict results as yet, but it is worth while to recall that it was Dr. Clark and Christian Endeavor that inaugurated the Christian citizenship movement which has had such notable consequences. It was also Dr. Clark who gave to the endeavorers a few years ago the slogan, "A saloonless nation by 1920." At the time that prospect seemed "an irridescent dream," but now nothing is likelier. All the force of the Christian Endeavor movement has been put solidly behind the effort to eradicate the liquor business, especially during the war.

WORKING FOR SOLDIERS.

Mobility is a characteristic of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. It is possible to get quick action from them, partly because of their youth and impetuous temperament, and partly, also, because the weekly meetings make prompt action easy. Young people are not as committed to routine, and not as bound up with many engagements as their elders.

So the Texas Endeavorers were first into action when the troops were called to the Mexican border. They held religious meetings among them, gave entertainments, provided games and comforts, and in various ways put the touch of fellowship and good will and home and Christian influence upon the men at the front.

Great numbers of the soldiers are members of the Christian Endeavor Society, and special efforts are made to keep these young men in touch with their home societies. Some of the enthusiastic ones gather the soldiers themselves into regimental societies.

Many of the American warships also contain Christian Endeavor organizations. There is a special department for this work, and it is called "floating endeavor." Countless "comfort bags" have been sent to the men aboard ship by Christian Endeavor societies, and in port cities the local endeavorers hold meetings weekly on both naval and mercantile vessels.

For many months plans had been under way for a great international Christian Endeavor convention in New York City this summer. It was expected that this would be the largest of the great Christian Endeavor conventions for many years past. With America's entry into the war this convention was cancelled. The national officers felt that the money and time and interest of the endeavorers was definitely needed in patriotic service.

How squarely the religious forces of the country are behind the nation in the present conflict is scarcely realized by the general public. It means, for one thing, that the war will be maintained on the high plane of Christian altruism and idealism.

THE RELIGIOUS RAMBLER.

FRIENDSHIP OF JAPAN GROWING.

During the Past Six Months America has Fairly Rushed Forward in the Good Graces of the People of Faraway Nippon.

TOKIO (Japan) May 28.—[To the Editor of The Times:] A new Japan is being born. It is one of the miracles of the world war, like Russia's regeneration. The Terauchi government is a striking phase of the change. When Viscount Kato, Marquis Okuma's lieutenant, wrecked his party on the Gibraltar of China's everlasting patience, it was not the republic's diplomacy that was responsible. The new spirit evoked by the European struggle for democracy and international square dealing was the current that dashed his ship to pieces. His notorious demands simply did not jibe with the new world sentiment that had come to animate the Allies. Why Kato, heir to Marquis Okuma's leadership of Japan's democracy, did not sense this is one of the unsolved mysteries of Far East statecraft.

A second wonder equally inscrutable is Gen. Count Terauchi's clear intuition of what Viscount Kato utterly failed to see. Americans, familiar with Japan, trembled for China when the iron hand which had ruled Korea so inflexibly and in the main so justly, gripped the helm. But the man of war proved himself a man of statesmanlike vision. He saw that Japan was transforming China into her most implacable foe and that the leadership in Asia which his nation had been craving and dreaming about for a half-century was possible only along the road of friendly service. Even India, whose good opinion Japan has sedulously cultivated, was growling at the dog-in-the-manger spirit of Kato's demands. Doubtless also from both Britain and America, gentle intimations reached the Japanese government that this truculent holding up of the young republic was likely to make trouble. Moreover, Terauchi's repudiation of Kato's foreign policy voiced the conscience of his nation, though the yellow press and jingoes howled. This showed him to be a shrewd interpreter of the mind of his people.

The most notable movement in the Far East since this warrior became Premier has been the changing attitude of Japan towards America. No man on earth is so quick to sense the mind of the other fellow and re-echo appropriately as the Japanese. When, therefore, America's prejudice against Japan began to wane, like bell to push button this nation responded in harmony. Probably no people ever tried more conscientiously or honestly to win another's friendship than these earnest Far Eastern folk have done during the past seven years. Did America dread an influx of Japanese laborers? Presto, the exit from the Rising Sun land shut inexorably and in the years since the gentlemen's agreement was made, not an immigrant, undesired by Uncle Sam, has gotten through. Were the prejudices of California stirred by the queer customs of the little brown men? A stream of lecturers, each bearing a name known throughout the empire, crossed the Pacific and dinned the gospel, "learn American ways," into the hearts of their countrymen. Was the chorus, "Japanese never can amalgamate" re-echoed by the yellow press? It was met by a movement starting in Hawaii and spreading to the mainland which led the vast majority of immigrant Japanese not only to decide to make the United States their permanent home, but also to see to it that their children born in their adopted country were duly registered as Americans and trained for intelligent citizenship.

When a large company of persons starts such a movement it affects the subconsciousness of those at whom it is aimed. So America began to alter her view of the Japanese insensibly. The fine crusade of the Federal Council of Churches, with Dr. Gulick as its spokesman, attacked the dense ignorance of the United States on the subject of Japan and by illuminating the mind stirred the public conscience.

Meantime, Baron Shibusawa, Japan's Pierpont Morgan, had in a series of personal interviews with leading financiers throughout the States, interested them in a policy of commercial co-operation between America and Japan for the friendly development of China's vast resources. As a result, men like Judge Gary have visited the Far East and a large programme is being quietly mapped out.

During the past six months America has fairly rushed forward with her good offices. First the great "Made in Japan" press banquet in Columbia, Mo., focussed the attention of the empire's business men upon the real friendliness of American journalists. This was followed by the Kaiser's last kick to upset the good relations between the Pacific neighbors, which led to the discovery of the studied attempt of the German government for years to embitter these two powers by originating the absurd canards concerning Japan's designs against the United States that have flooded our yellow and even other journals. This revelation has led to many frank expressions in our press and has shown each nation why it was that some sinister force mystifying to each of them always intervened whenever the old-time friendly relations seemed about to be re-established. Next, the appointment of Frank R. Rutter as commercial attache has seemed to set our government's seal upon the policy of play together, advocated so ardently by Baron Shibusawa. Finally, California's barring of the movies which, doubtless as a part of Germany's studied scheme, have been circulated to foster popular prejudice against Japan, has convinced this country of the readiness of the Pacific Coast to deal fairly with the Asiatic as nothing else perhaps could have done. All these evidences that America is sick of being made the dupe of designing men, bent upon keeping the progressive East and the progressive West apart, and is resolved to do justice to Asia, have had a mighty effect here on this side of the Pacific. Even the yellow journals, which unconsciously lent themselves to the Teuton plot, are feeling the shame of their anti-American animus. Everywhere one is conscious of the revival of the old-time enthusiasm for America, only upon a higher and healthier plane. Alliance in the great world war for human liberty and permanent peace is mightily strengthening this sentiment.

Clearly, our nation is facing an unexampled opportunity in the Far East and the excitements of fighting ought not to be allowed to hinder us from seizing and making the most of it, for the transformation already wrought by the war has left Japan in a singularly lonely situation. This nation's last stroke of mediaeval displomacy—must we not now brand as mediaeval all of that antebellum international policy concerned with balance of power, spheres of influence and land grabbing?—was her recent treaty with Russia. So long as the Czar was the "Little Father" Japan could hope to muddle along in the old slough paths of ruthlessnes in her relations with China. But with Russia a democracy, China has absolutely no foe to fear. It is hard for Americans to realize what a mighty stroke for humanity—Asiatic humanity—was struck when the Duma and the army joined hands. With the explosion which threatens to blow into kingdom come the present regime in the Central Powers, Japan will be the only remaining stronghold of bureaucracy among civilized nations.

The plight of the ruling caste here, then, has become an impossible one. The country is menaced with questions, any one of which is enough to threaten revolution. The exploitation of labor, the extreme poverty of the mass of the people, the growing consumption of alcoholic liquor, the crushing burdens of militarism, the relaxation of moral sanctions, the educational problem all press at once for solution. An alliance with bona fide democracies in crushing out the last remnants of aristrocratic privilege and in enthroning the people everywhere is a constant rebuke of much that the makers of modern Japan have been building up with painstaking care.

Yet those who know the genius of this race best do not acutely fear a revolution. The Japanese statesmen are wise. Fifty years ago they swept away feudalism with little or no bloodshed and it was done, too, on the principle of noblesse oblige. That will doubtless be the modus operandi now in transforming the bureaucratic systems into bona fide democracy.

But the situation appeals to us for the exercise of the highest form of international good will. Japan craves and needs America's disinterested friendship. If granted to her unstintedly, it will bind the Pacific nations together as nothing else possibly could. The call for nobleness in our relations with this people is mightily moving. Our President has shown such a wonderful power in growing up to his great task that one is moved to believe that he will see and grasp the unexampled opportunity granted to our nation in this crisis of Japan's history.

Fortunately, at this juncture, a case has come before the Circuit Court of Appeal in California, which focuses in a peculiar manner our opportunity to do Japan and the Far East generally a service of incalculable value. The appeal of Takie Ozawa for naturalization is to be argued in May or June and will establish the question whether or not Japanese are eligible to American citizenship. Of the personal character of Mr. Ozawa, it is enough to say that both of the United States District judges before whom the case was brought in Hawaii went out of their way to express their high estimation of his character and fitness for exercising the rights of a citizen of the United States. His petition was denied by Judge Clemons in accordance with the formula, "A Mongolian is not white, a Japanese is a Mongolian, and as non-whites cannot be naturalized, Japanese are barred." Both of these major premises are questionable, the first because many persons of Mongolian race have been admitted as white into our citizenship, and the second because Aryan admixture makes the classification of Japanese as Mongolians unsound.

If by judicial decision this stigmatization of Japanese as non-white, while Syrians and Jews among Semites, Armenians and Parsees are ruled among the whites, can be relegated, as scientifically it should be, to the lumber-room, and eligibility to naturalization, where not curtailed by statute, as in the case of Chinese, can be put upon the sound foundation of individual capacity for American citizenship as constituting the only kind of whiteness justly definable, the last remaining cause of friction between our government and Japan will have been removed and the permanent friendship of the two nations established on the sure basis of human equality.

Paradoxical Freight Rate.

[Girard in Philadelphia Ledger:] A railroad official was among several others dining at the home of Mrs. Good Housekeeper the other evening.

"I always weigh my meats when they come from the butcher's," said she, "and yesterday I found a roast a shade over one pound short in weight."

"What did that meat cost a pound?" inquired the railroader.

"Thirty-two cents," replied Mrs. Good Housekeeper.

"Well," laughed the railroad official, "that fellow swindled you in that one deal out of a larger sum of money than our railroad gets to haul from Chicago all the meat your family eats in one month."

It astonished the rest of us, but his figures were correct. That family eats fifteen pounds of meat in a week, and the cost of bringing it from Chicago for a month is about 30 cents.

Peace at Any Price.

"POOR FOLKS," BY DOSTOEVSKI, EXCELS GOGOL'S "THE CLOAK."

BY SUZANNE M. DANIEL.

FEDOR DOSTOEVSKI was a master of psychology and could depict mental anguish in a most vivid manner. Because of his ability to portray varying moods his characters are more poignantly real than those found in many another author's books. As an interesting example of this fact, let us compare his story, "Poor Folk," with one built upon a similar theme by Gogol, entitled "The Cloak."

Each portrays the tragedy of a lonely, misunderstood old man, yet Dostoevski's hero has our sincerest pity and sympathy, while Gogol's succeeds only in arousing our amused contempt. Dostoevski's psychoanalysis of his hero reveals his mental and spiritual suffering, while Gogol depicts merely a series of calamitous incidents befalling a wretched old man without enlisting our sympathies in the slightest degree.

"Poor Folk" and "The Cloak" are stories dealing with similar characters, occupying the same station in life, but their tragedies are handled in an entirely different manner. The sufferings of the hero of "Poor Folk" are more intense because they are of the spirit. We do not feel so sorry over the death of the copyist who dies from grief and a cold contracted by the loss of his beloved cloak as we do for the lonely old man, the light of whose life goes out when the girl he worships marries and leaves him forever.

Each story deals with the uneventful life of a tchinovik who has worked hard for many years but never has secured promotion. Each is a zealous workman, whose only interest in life lies in his work. They are the butt of innnumerable jokes perpetrated by their fellow officials and lead lonely lives, keeping absolutely apart from the society of others. In the evenings they continue their weary drudgery of copying that they might add to their meager earnings. They seek no outside enjoyment of any description, leading narrow and isolated lives. The stories deal with the scrimping and saving practiced by the two men, one in order to buy himself a new cloak, the other for the nobler purpose of supplying the sickly girl he loves with the necessities and a few of the luxuries of life. Each stints himself on food, deprives himself of light and goes through many other pitiful economies to achieve his end.

FAILS TO APPEAL.

But here the similarity between the two men ceases. Akakiy Akakievitch is a shambling, grotesque figure, dirty and unkempt, exciting rather our amusement than our pity. His ragged condition does not annoy him until he begins to feel the wintry cold keenly. The old copyist in "Poor Folk" is a more heroic figure. He also is ragged and ill-cared for, but he suffers intense shame because of this condition. He has sold his good uniform in order to provide the girl he loves with the things she needs. Every day he slinks shamefacedly into his seat at the office for fear someone will make a remark about the ragged condition of his clothes. He almost dies of mortification when he is called before his superior and one of his buttons falls from his coat to the floor. One feels that he is of finer mold than the slovenly hero of "The Cloak."

"Poor Folks."

Perhaps it would be well to narrate the plot of the two stories in order to set the two characters before the reader more distinctly. The hero of "The Cloak," as has been said, has begun to feel the chill blasts of wintry weather and betakes himself to see his tailor, with a view to having his old coat mended. The tailor gives up in despair at the thought of attempting again to patch that coat, of which even the collar has been cut away to be used some place where it would be more essential. He flatly refuses to again mend the ragged garment and bids its unhappy owner look about for money to buy a new one.

Then begin months of weary saving, the poor clerk denying himself everything that is not absolutely essential to the maintenance of life. But at last the happy day dawns when he is the proud possessor of a new coat. His joy is pitiful to behold. When he arrives at the office his fellow officials are quite stunned by his magnificence, and one of them, in a burst of generosity, invites him to a party at his home that evening to christen the new garment.

It is the first evening in many years that Akakievich has spent doing anything except copying. He is childishly happy, but unfortunately drinks several glasses of champagne, which affect him in the usual manner. He becomes lost on his way home and is held up upon the deserted square and robbed of the pride of his life, his nice new cloak.

All efforts to recover the stolen raiment prove unavailing and the clerk is overcome with grief. He dons his ragged garment once more, but it proves an insufficient protection against the biting wind, and he contracts quinsy. A fever develops, and in a few days the old copyist slips away to a land where cloaks or the lack of them will bother him no more.

TEST OF LOVE.

On the other hand, consider the story of "Poor Folk." The hero of this tale has moved into even more wretched quarters so that he may spend the extra money thus gained for the support of his cousin, a sickly, parasitic individual whom he loves. He deprives himself of the few little luxuries to which he has been accustomed and spends the money on her. He is an object of ridicule at his office, but he bears the taunts of his fellow workmen with equanimity. In the same manner he endures the cruel remarks of his landlady and fellow-lodgers, except when they reflect on the girl across the way.

His only happiness in life consists in watching the girl at the window of her room, as she lives just across the court from him, and in receiving letters from her. He seldom calls on her, for fear his visits may compromise her. His life becomes daily more wretched because of lack of sufficiently nourishing food.

In the meantime, the object of his adoration, who has been the victim of untold trials and tribulations during the entire length of her existence, decides to marry a man for whom she has always expressed the most inveterate hatred. She communicates her intentions to the old man, who is heart-broken over her decision. Nevertheless, he hides his grief when he realizes that his objections will have no weight, and even buys wedding finery for her in order that her health may not be jeopardized by shopping in the cold air. She marries and leaves forever, and the one beam of happiness which he had in his lonely old life fades away.

The two stories are told in a very different manner. "The Cloak" is very short, and related more or less in a spirit of fun by the author. We feel that the writer is ridiculing his unhappy old man. He depicts him in a rather ludicrous manner at the outset, and thus robs him of our sympathy, as it is difficult for the average human being to feel anything but mirth for the ridiculous. When the poor old man dies, we do not feel intensely sorry over this tragic ending to what seemed a trivial, although, of course, it was one of vital importance to the old clerk. The donning of the new cloak was the one gala day of his life, and his whole soul had been wrung with agony over the garment's loss. But his story has not the pathos and pitiful appeal of "Poor Folk."

SYMPATHY EXCITED.

Although the plot of "Poor Folk" is set forth by the artificial means of letters, it is told in a sympathetic manner such as of which one would scarcely think Dostoevski capable. Certainly it is a manner which the embittered Dostoevski of later years never could have employed. We feel the keenest pity for the unhappy man and we can even spare a bit of pity for the weak, silly little heroine. It is in this manner of sympathetic handling, and psychological insight into character that "Poor Folk" differs from "The Cloak." It is just this difference which places Dostoevski in the foremost ranks of literature, far above Gogol.

Dostoevski occupies a position in Russian literature equal to that of Tolstoy. Indeed, by many he is accounted greater than Tolstoy, because of his wonderful psychological studies of pathological types. "Crime and Punishment" stands without a peer in literature as a minute study of the mental torture and spiritual suffering of a murderer. And this quality of analysis and insight into character is plainly shown in "Poor Folk," his very first work, written when he was a poor young student in the university.

Gogol was an older writer who had "arrived," yet the maiden effort of an inexperienced student far excelled his story built upon a similar theme. This was due to the fact that Gogol narrated the material incidents connected with his hero's tragedy, while Dostoevski got down under his character's skin, and laid bare his soul for us to see.

This is why it is so interesting to compare the works of these two writers, the master and the apprentice, and study the quality that so clearly indicates the latter's genius.

INTERVIEW WITH A NAVY TORPEDO.

What it is, How it Operates and at Times Fails to Operate.

BY A. FREED,
Gunner's Mate, United States Navy.

WELL. Well! Well! I am surprised, with all the notoriety I have gained and the destruction I have caused, that nobody would tell you of what I am made and what I am capable of doing!

I am twenty-one feet in length and twenty-one inches in diameter, and ordinarily I am assembled in three parts, known as the tail and afterbody, the flask and the head. My tail contains the machinery which turns the propellers that force me through the water; the flask carries my fuel in the form of compressed air that sends me on my mission of destruction—and when I start, woe unto them who may be in my path, for I am the most dreaded thing that ever sailed the seven seas. I cost $9000, and can run 10,000 yards before my energy is used up, traveling that distance at the rate of about fifty feet per second. I am a monster made of forged nickel steel and weigh 2000 pounds, and have turbine engines which are capable of making 1760 revolutions per minute. In my head I carry a high explosive called guncotton, which explodes upon contact. In times of peace, when I am practiced with, the guncotton is taken out of my head and water is substituted, to compensate for its weight. When I have been fired in practice and have made my run and expended all my energy I have lost sufficient weight to float to the surface until I am picked up, recharged and refired.

I will never forget the time I was fired in practice off the coast at Panama, at a place called Chiriki lagoon, when, instead of completing my run as usual, I left the boat, ran quite a distance and then sank to the bottom.

The navy gunners on board the submarine were having their semi-annual torpedo practice, and the night before they had made all preparations to fire me the next morning. They charged me with air and made all adjustments on my machinery and then put me into the torpedo tube, where I spent the night.

In the morning, bright and early, before breakfast, the gunners came down and pulled me out of my tube, went over their adjustments of the previous day and recharged my flask to its full capacity, as the pressure of air had decreased with its cooling over night. I was then shoved back into the tube. the door was closed and locked, and there I was, in total darkness.

Scarcely two hours had passed when, all of a sudden, the front gate of the torpedo tube was opened and the sea rushed in, and I was totally covered with water from the Caribbean Sea. The next thing I knew I was shot out of my resting place and into the open sea, and I immediately went down to a depth of fifteen feet and raced along through the water at terrific speed for a distance of about three miles, when I found I had lost all my motive power and started to come up. After reaching the surface I discovered a drain plug was missing from my air flask, which permitted the water to enter so rapidly that my buoyancy was destroyed and I sank to the bottom before the boat's crew from the submarine had a chance to come to my rescue, and immediately all preparations were made to send a diver down to recover me.

Having struck the bottom head first, I sank several feet into the soft mud of the lagoon. The diver was lowered to the bottom about fifty feet from where I went down, and I could see him cautiously advancing, the current being so strong that he had great difficulty in walking, and had to bend over so as to offer less resistance to it; and every time he would lift his foot his sight would be blurred by the clouds of mud. He finally became tired and gave the signal to go up. After resting a short while he descended again to continue his search for me, and after walking around for an hour or so he sat down on the bottom to get his bearings. When he started out again he headed directly for me and stopped within five feet of me. Now, all this time I was covered with mud and wishing he would find me and bring me up. I could tell from the way he was reconnoitering that he was making a final attempt for that day to locate me.

At last he received a signal from above to discontinue the search until the next day, and there I had to lie all that night.

The following morning, bright and early, my friend, the diver, came looking for me again. He looked and looked without success and towards evening went away again and I thought I was doomed to stay there, for this was the second night I had spent in the mud. The following morning my attention was attracted to something dark and bulky and, behold! it was my friend the diver being lowered right on top of me. He was surprised. He saw the hole I had made and stooped down and scooped a few handsful of mud away and there I was in full sight before him. I could imagine his feelings upon finding me after a search of two days. He sent the good news up to his tenders and it was almost no time before he had a spade and was removing the mud from around me, so as to enable him to secure a line to my body. This was quickly done and I was soon hoisted and placed on board the submarine again, where the gunners went to work on me, wiped my body off nicely and with several sheets of emery cloth removed the coat of rust that had formed while I was at the bottom of the sea, and I was once again put back in my old place, shining like a new silver dollar and ready for another shot.

Next morning, at the usual early hour, I noticed the naval gunners rigging up tackles and chain falls and I knew preparations were being made to send me out for another run.

The first thing I knew they were hauling me out toward the middle of the deck, and had a steady line secured to both ends of my cradle to prevent me from rolling from one side of the boat to the other, as the sea outside was very choppy. A large copper pipe was screwed into my air flask, the air-compressed back to the engine-room was started and the compressed air was forced into my flask, singing like a humming bird as it went in. After a half hour's time I was charged to my fullest capacity, having 2400 pounds pressure bearing on all sides of my steel body. The air compressor was then stopped, the valve in my body closed to prevent the escape of air, and the copper charging pipe was then removed. After the torpedo men had made the necessary adjustments to my rudders, my cradle was unlashed and I was again drawn up into the torpedo tube by a cable. After being snugly fitted into my old place I began to worry, thinking I might again go to the bottom of the sea. I was suddenly awakened from my reverie by the rush of water into the tube and before I knew it, I had been expelled from my resting place by a pressure of compressed air behind my tail, and once again I was forced out into the briny deep.

As I passed from the tube my starting lever was automatically thrown to the rear, thereby lifting a valve off its seat, allowing my compressed air (which previously had been packed away in my air flask) to escape through my tail and thereby cause my machinery to run at terrific speed. As previously arranged by the naval gunners, I descended to a depth of eighteen feet and then straightened out on my course. It was followed as straight as a die for the whole run of 10,000 yards, not deviating two feet on either side. My machinery worked like a clock and I knew my run was being anxiously followed by the gunners, who were looking through binoculars from the deck of the submarine.

At the completion of my run I came to the surface, whereupon I discovered I had been fired at a target at an 8000-yard range and that I had passed directly under the center of the target, making a perfect run, which is known as a "bullseye." I had a very short time to remain in the trough of the sea to be wallowed around for within a very few minutes one of the navy's fifty-foot speed boats had caught up to me and soon had me in tow, back to the submarine.

Upon my arrival there I was greeted with cheers and much laughing and talking, for I had brought the first navy prize for submarines, amounting to $20 to each one of the gunners who helped to have me make the bullseye.

HAPPY THOUGHT CLUB SYMPOSIUM.

BY EUGENE BROWN.

It is the opinion of many serious thinkers that the production of the Shakesperian revue by the Happy Thought studio was a determining factor in the present war alignment. But for this massive drama of the screen America might still be having a game of conversation with the Kaiser instead of actually fighting him on the high seas. It will be recalled that because of the propaganda of preparedness and patriotism that was sweeping over the country Director David Oliver Tobasco desired to introduce the United States Navy in his great film medley of the works of the immortal bard. It appeared to be somewhat of a job to do this properly—without marring the historical proprieties, as it were. It would hardly do to use a flock of American battleships to run down the ghost of Hamlet's father, neither could Brutus be introduced as commander of the dreadnaught Arkansas. It would seem rather far-fetched to present a Richard clamoring to trade his kingdom for a fleet when it was really a fleet horse he wanted, nor would it seem fit that Macbeth and Macduff should engage each other with a squadron of destroyers instead of a couple of ponderous toad-stabbers.

Finally the director had the masterful inspiration of bringing the navy into the Forest of Arden. There it would not be in the way, and it would even be possible for Orlando and Rosalind to paste their messages on the blackboard of the flagship instead of pinning them to the trees of the forest. Where the wrestler says that he dreads naught the Duke would exclaim: "Ah! here is a dreadnaught now," and then the American fleet would sail proudly into the forest in war formation, with all the bands playing "The Star Spangled Banner." This inspiring spectacle would bring the audience to its feet.

The director of the Happy Thought studio had it all mapped out and finally wired Secretary Daniels asking for the loan of the navy to have its picture taken as indicated. The department was quite agreeable, but wanted to know how much draught there was in the Forest of Arden and whether it was navigable for big ships. He also insisted on the strictest secrecy lest knowledge of the maneuvers should reach the Kaiser and enable him to mine the forest or populate it with a herd of his impolite and ungentlemanly submarines.

So the promise was made and the arrangements completed. In due time the camera got busy for these inspiring scenes, and all seemed well. Then came tragic disclosures. The brick battleship Illinois was hit by a torpedo from a submarine just as she was steaming into the forest. She went down with all on board in three fathoms of leaf mold. Her crew consisted of a night watchman and his coon dog.

It was evident that there was a leak somewhere—possibly in the battleship, possibly in the Foreign Office. Worst of all was the suspicion that there was a German spy in the Happy Thought studio. How did the Kaiser learn of the plans to utilize the navy in these maneuvers and thus be able to intercept them with his undersea boats?

At one time the finger pointed to Horikari Shimose, the Nipponese nightingale, who had been seen drinking a glass of beer the Saturday previous. Prof. Watts Eaton Hughes has always been suspicious of a possible alliance between Japan and Germany with the intent of taking possession of the Pacific Coast. With the American fleet out of the way and a naval base established in the forest of Arden, this might easily be accomplished.

But the Japanese bard was able to prove an alibi and the leak must have been in the navy itself. Anyhow war was declared and a part of the Forest of Arden films suppressed.

There are varying opinions in the matter of locating the annual outing of the club. Some want to stay in the studio and knit socks for the soldiers, but most members want to get out into the open. It is good for both mind and body and the members take up their fountain pens with renewed ambitions.

Etta Lott, the guardian angel of Balboa Island, whose eloquent panegyric upon that delectable retreat aroused the members to enthusiasm two weeks ago, was again heard from. She said:

"Will you not please settle it that we are to go to Balboa Island on the picnic? The residents there are interested in the club and wish to see the members. They have promised if we go there to let the members have free use of their rowboats, gasoline launches, yachts, even the speed boat B. I. F., automobiles, airplanes, tennis courts and golf links. What more can be desired? There are no poker chips there but we could manage to do without them one day. If a vote is taken on it could you not manage it in some way to make it carry.

"I came from Ohio, where they do not let women vote and do not know how elections are managed to be sure beforehand of the result.

"We could arrange to cook meat and potatoes out of doors on the coals. I enjoy a dinner of that kind. Please settle it soon so that I shall not be in suspense.

"The club seems to show improvement in its literary effort. It affords us enjoyment to be associated with minds that reflect our own and have the same aspirations."

In further discussion of the outing, Uncle William Snaggs, the wild sage of the San Gabriel Wash, and president of the club, expressed himself as anxious to keep as near the home plate as possible. He has a swarm of hens to be put to bed and he hates to be kept out after curfew. When asked for his opinion he breathed heavily through his gills and remarked:

"Under the head of unfinished business I would like to suggest a benefit for the annual outing fund of the Happy Thought Club and to show that nothing but brotherly love permeates this crowd, I further suggest the Old Resident as custodian of the fund. As long as Sister Heartsease is secretary the O. R. won't be far away and the fund will be easily available. As for talent, the O. R. can recite the 'Ancient Mariner,' Harikari Shimose will fit in on 'Hands Across the Sea,' Violet Busby would be in line for something on the order of 'A Rag, A Bone and a Hank of Hair' and there's others too numerous to mention, to say nothing of Marie Walcamp and yours truly in a skit entitled 'Love's Young Dream.' The outing, of course will be held somewhere within the 5-cent fare limit unless you can manage without the restraining influence of the chair. A motion to this effect will be in order after a bit but first I wish to explain that I've blown in my last jack for a war bond in addition to being detailed for special Home Guard duty as per the poem I am about to recite.

Buy a Bond!

—Buy a Liberty Bond at Bullock's Monday—First Floor

—and "AT BULLOCK'S" is as essential as "JUNE MUSLIN UNDERWEAR"—for it is at Bullock's, that THE June Muslin Underwear of particular distinction as concerns quality, variety and value, is being shown——AT BULLOCK'S where Muslin Underwear has ever been notable—every month in an ascending scale of character—and where January and June have ever been months of Particular Exploitation.

—If you have not known Bullock's muslin underwear—then this June

Muslin Underwear

And These June Values

—are reasons why you should know it now.

—There are the materials, so carefully picked for their quality.

—The designing, so carefully selected for its character.

—The trimmings, so carefully chosen for their beauty and appropriateness.

—There are the Numbers of Garments concerned—and the varieties—and THE VALUES——And THE PRICES were made possible by Buying that was not merely big and brilliant—but Sane.

—[And the story of the Buying would be an interesting story to tell.]

—There could be a long list of items printed—all about all the kinds of garments there will be at $1—for example, there will be

25 Styles in Gowns at $1.00

—Just supposing every style were to be described with its material—and its trimming of embroidery or lace—

—And there will be Two-Piece Combinations at $1.00—and Chemise and White Petticoats at $1.00, too!

—Then there will be a Great Range of Garments at $1.25 and $1.50.

—At $1.75 will be Gowns—Combinations, Envelope Chemise and Petticoats.

—At $2.45 and $3.45 will be other lists, and then there will be —At beautiful Underprices—Crepe de Chine Chemise at $1.95; Gowns at $5.95; Envelope Chemise at $3.95.

The Beautiful Undersilks

—The Camisoles of Crepe de Chine or Wash Satin at $1.00; the Corset Covers of Cotton at 50c; the Drawers at 50c and more—the Crepe Underwear and

The Oversize Underwear

—In Gowns from $1.25 to $3.75; Petticoats from $1.25 to $6.50; Drawers from 50c to $2.75; Corset Covers from 85c to $2.25; Envelope Chemise from $1.25 to $2.50; Knee Length Skirts from 85c to $1.75.

—If one went into finer details, wouldn't it be confusing? There are so many of them—

—It just seems as though the difficult conditions of the year had been forgotten—and that every obstacle had been overcome—and that —This June Muslin Underwear Event should be far and away the most successful of all the June Events that Bullock's has held—

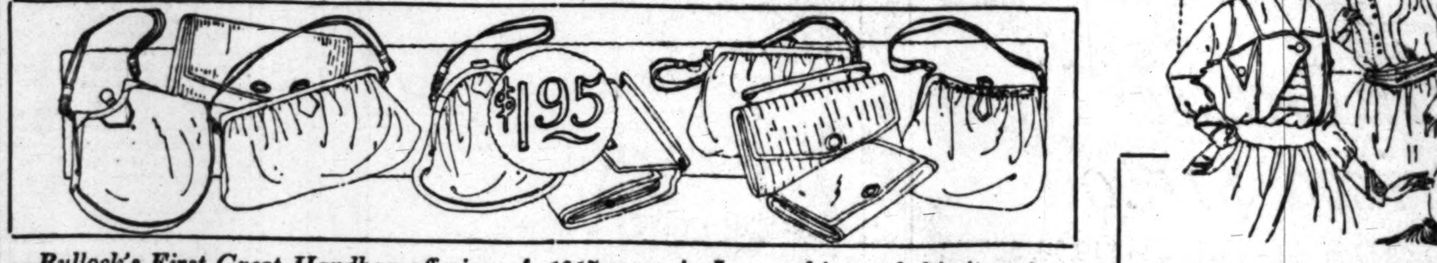
—It will continue Monday morning. There will be thousands of garments—all of them good garments—and there will be table after table drifted high with values.

—After this—the thought that occurs to the writer is one of Invitation—"Won't you come to see?"

—At Bullock's—Fourth Floor.



—Bullock's First Great Handbag offering of 1917 comes in June and is epochal in its nature.

720 Handbags—all at $1.95

—Every bag new, and perfect in every respect—as though they were to go into regular stock at regular prices—

—Medium and small shapes—including several different styles of the favored Envelope purse

—Seventeen different effects, all told—including 3 of white silk—every bag silk lined—every bag $1.95.

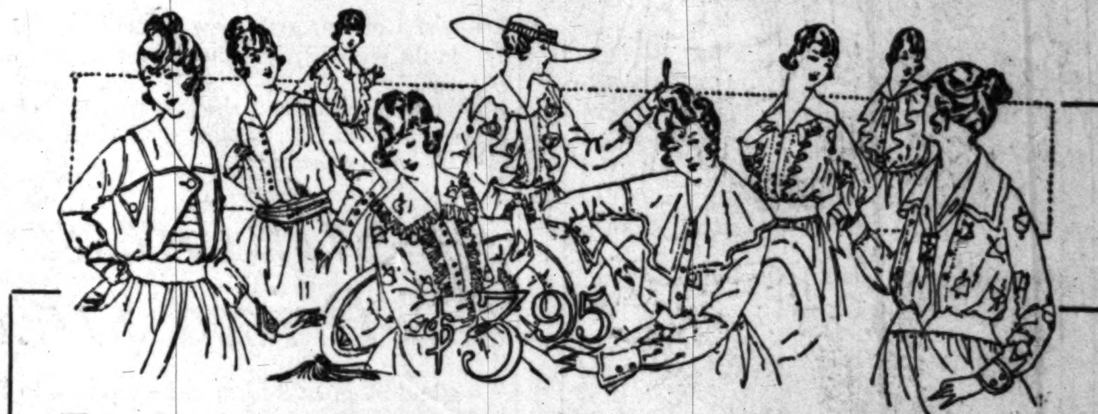
—The leathers are Goat Seal, both pebble and barley grain finish; corrugated Patent and Auto Leathers; Buffed Calf; also Moire Silk in white only—

—The colors are Black, Blue, Brown, Gray, Tan and White—

—Bags that simply couldn't be—if it were not for the co-operation of their maker—when we whispered in his ear months ago—we knew he would understand, but we had no idea he would go so far as he has gone to show his interest and enthusiasm—

—It is your advantage—make use of it—Buy new Handbags for your own use and for gifts—at Bullock's, Monday, $1.95—1st floor.

P. S.—A window display of these handbags is being made next to Seventh Street Entrance—so you may see them today.



Impossible! They Can't Be!

—and these Blouses may inspire you to exclamations as decided, and negative—

$3.95! Indeed They Could Not Be!

—according to all the gauges of regular value that have been furnished us this year—Yet $3.95 they are, and immediately they become a new gauge for special values—for Special! Special! Special they are.

OF ART AND ARTISTS

BY ANTONY ANDERSON.

Unborn Beauty.

Youth now flees on feathered foot,
Faint and fainter sounds the flute,
Rarer songs of gods; and still
Somewhere on the sunny hill,
Or along the winding stream,
Through the willows, flits a dream;
Flits but shows a smiling face,
Flees but with so quaint a grace,
None can choose to stay at home,
All must follow, all must roam.

This is unborn beauty: she
Now in air floats high and free,
Takes the sun and breaks the blue;
Late with stooping pinion flew
Raking hedgerow trees, and wet
Her wing in silver streams, and set
Shining foot on temple roof;
Now again she flies aloof,
Coasting mountain clouds and kisst
By the evening's amethyst.

Many Impressions.

Whistler and Reubens, Rembrandt, Raeburn and Sir Joshua—if a man keeps such a list of names as these in his vest pocket, so to speak, that he may consult it at every opportunity, you are at once assured of the wide catholicity of his appreciations. Such a man would, of course, not confine his sympathies to five masters, but would straightway begin to extend the five to fifty.

Such a man, I found, is Clarence Hinkle, on whom I called last Wednesday because I had been informed that he was holding an exhibition of pictures and sketches at his studio, No. 1548 West Sixth street. This exhibition of twenty canvases will be open to the public every Friday afternoon from 2 to 5, when the painter himself will be on hand. On other days of the week you may not be sure of finding him in, for he is one of the instructors in the life classes of the Los Angeles School of Art and Design.

Mr. Hinkle came to Los Angeles only a few weeks ago—for the first time in his life, though he was born in the northern part of California. He has had a studio in San Francisco for several years, where he painted several of the decorations in buildings at the exposition. He studied painting at the Art Students' League in New York, in the Pennsylvania Academy, Philadelphia, and he spent six years in Paris, where, of course, he worked at the Julian under Jean Paul—as what aspiring young American student does not?

But Clarence Hinkle maintains that he owes more to the magic of the old masters of the Louvre than to the supervision of the modern master of the Julian. These he visited from day to day, and he copied many of their most appealing canvases—the haunting portraits that he could not let pass without accepting their challenge. And especially did he linger near the lovely ladies of the big Englishmen, Lawrence, Gainsborough, Copley and Raeburn. What distinction and what elegance!—the distinction and elegance that belong by heritage to the most aristocratic class of women in the world.

Mr. Hinkle's portraits have much of the same reposeful distinction, though his subjects have been, for the most part, women nurtured under our American democracy. Is it all due, then, to the feeling and manner of the artist? I think not, for I hold that a democracy lifts up while it levels. Our women are very pretty, but they are so "equal" to anybody and everybody that they have attained to a perfect poise. Too, they have the leisure in which to practice it.

All usage in art becomes, in time, selective. The trained artist chooses what he wants and what he needs for self-expression, discarding the hundred little tricks that he "learnt at school." The tricks were necessary in the beginning, for they gave him dexterity of hand, but he finds them in the way when he buckles down to the serious business of painting pictures. If he is a genuine artist, and not the mere imitator that most so-called artists remain to the end of the chapter—if, in brief, he is a creator—he will play and experiment with his materials early and late, ever on the lookout for the new thing to say and the new word in which to say it.

This, at all events, is the theory of Clarence Hinkle, a theory which I am inclined heartily to uphold. The searching inventive faculty of the human race is more triumphantly displayed by the artist than by the builder of the U-boat, for he offers us more abundant life while the other destroys it. After the war this truth will be brought home with added force, and then we shall mourn anew for the artists that were slain.

To Clarence Hinkle, indeed, the whole life of the artist is a series of experiments, and when one problem is solved there is always another—a hundred others—to attack. Therefore his exhibition of pictures and sketches will hold for you many and various impressions, each of which is a record of the young painter's thought and struggle. If art is really a criticism of life, an estimate and an inspiration—and who can doubt this?—then it must perforce show the thought and struggle which is life itself. Yet the ideal must linger over it like a bloom.

Mr. Hinkle's ideality shows itself in various ways, the most pervasive and the most easily discovered being that sense for order in life which finds expression in the decorative in art. Everything that he paints has a "scheme" of color, consciously or unconsciously worked out, and his placements of figures and objects are exceedingly happy and seldom conventionally hackneyed.

Although, in the present exhibition, he shows many things, little views from Paris, from Normandy, from San Francisco and from Los Angeles, I must confess that it was the portraits that interested me the most, the portraits and a few arrangements of female figures with still-life accessories. These have, as I said above, something of the Old English elegance, but generally with a strikingly simple and original color scheme, as in that picture of a woman with a white fur and purple-blue wide-rimmed hat, in which the exact quality of the fur was found by leaving the canvas bare and painting the surroundings up to it, in the sketch portrait of Armin Hansen, where the Danish-American characteristics of this brother artist are very subtly expressed, as well as in the sketch portrait of the severely plain woman in plum-colored clothes. Perhaps the finest of all the portraits is that of the woman with light, reddish hair, who is dressed in blue-gray velvet and wears a brownish fur collar, and who is seen against a background of warm gray. For all its seeming—and real—simplicity, this portrait is very complete, nothing

Ford."

Austin's "The Ford" Mifflin Company,) a novel of serious intent, symbolically based on the ford Jabbok—reflecting, perhaps, the Biblical study entailed in Miss Austin's "Jesus"—where Jacob wrestled with the angel and won the name of Israel, has infinitely superior descriptive values to those of narrative; and the side lights, incidentals and minor characters give more permanent and cherished impressions than the main features of the story, which is Californian, concerned with ranches, oil fields and land grabbing.

Kenneth Brent and sister Anne are carried from childhood to maturity. Their father leaves the ranch because a dry year and a restless wife make the work seem hopeless, and moves to an oil town where he gets in with a little group which, though it has oil and plenty of it, cannot buck the capitalist, Rickart. Eventually, Kenneth works in Rickart's office and for him so as to get into profitable deals; but instead he gets a new viewpoint on the man's method and purpose, realizes that they are ruthless rather than malicious, and when the crisis comes, breaks with his master to serve those who are to be exploited.

The current of the story carries forward a group of children who, when the story opens, are playing the Biblical story of Jacob at the ford: Frank Rickart, son of the capitalist, has all the gaucherie of the wealthy youth, but is not contemptible; Virginia Burke, whose unfortunate marriage has much to do with her anarchistic agitation and union-labor work; and Kenneth and Anne, the latter being strongly contrasted with the hysterical Virginia.

The description of the ranch and ranch life, of the oil wells and the people around them, all of the character delineation, too, is unqualifiedly good; but we feel thatthe movitation and complication of the plot is often vague and frequently forced.

"Gold Must Be Tried by Fire."

Richard Aumerle Maher's "Gold Must Be Tried by Fire" (The Macmillan Company,) like "The Shepherd of the North," has a fictional interest especially for those of Catholic faith, though for that matter the reader isn't turned into a Strassburg goose and stuffed with religion, or anything of the kind. The story deals with a mill girl who impulsively marries a labor agitator. In a ship disaster he proves to be a coward, so she feels herself freed from him, particularly as she is rescued by a handsome young fellow, who, she ultimately discovers, is the owner of the paper mill where she next goes to work. After some narrative commotion in which the young paper owner has a commercial fight for his life, the affairs dear to lovelorn hearts are terminated satisfactorily.

"Cleomenes."

To borrow a phrase from our masters, "within the memory of men now living," the historical novel was "the" novel. Along about the time "Quo Vadis" gave inspiration to a lot of scribblers who follow the literary fashion as debutantes do the millinery of the Parisians, Tom, Dick and Harriet were writing about the immorality of Nero and his love for virgins. If one reads the novelists, one will learn that libidinous gentry seek virgins; but if one turns to the more reliable pages of pathologists one will discover that these rakes prefer Lesbian women—which no reader of romance should ever believe for it at once clears the stage of the key arch to melodrama. And excitement is more desirable than truth. But if anybody is impertinent enough to say that even Lesbian dames were once virgins, it may be replied that so were Nero, Caligula, King Francis and Henry the Eighth—that is, they were whatever is the masculine of virgin.

However, Maris Warrington Billings in "Cleomenes" (John Lane Company) tells all the old scandal about Nero and does in it the prescribed archaic form of "perchance" and "thou" and "thee," making of it a romance cold as the statue Cleomenes, the patrician, carves for Nero so that his imperial nibs will grant a decree of divorce. Since Cleomenes's wife decamped with a lover and sojourns during the tale in Egypt, Cleomenes in justice seeks a divorce. But he must carve a statue of a beautiful virgin and bring both virgin and statue to court; and beautiful virgins were rare in Rome, as elsewhere. But Cleomenes finds her, oddly enough, wearing the weeds of a widow, and makes her statue, becomes in love with her, defies Nero, is sent to the arena and fights for his life; and she, the beautiful Diana, goes of her own will to Nero—and kills herself before him.

"The Emden."

Kapitanleutnant Hellmuth von Mucke, executive officer on the raider Emden under the title of his famous ship (Ritter & Co.) tells the story of her exploits. It was written for home consumption and roundly abuses England. The Kapitanleutnant is rather baffled by the praise given his ship and commander in the English press, and wholly at a loss to understand the sporting instinct that cheers a gallant and successful enemy. The Emden was a fighting boat and Von Muller a gallant captain; the Kapitanleutnant himself a worthy son of the Vikings, for after the ship went down he, and the landing party on shore at the time, commandeered an old tub of a boat, the Ayesha, and made his way again to Germany.

"The Emden" tells how a fake smokestack gave the German raider the appearance of an English ship, and how she lay in the trade channels waiting for merchantmen; how she raided harbors and fought her way out, and how all the crew knew that ultimately disaster awaited them, but kept cheerful and balked at no hazards.

It is a good and stirring story; marred somewhat by a Germanic prolixity of abuse for an enemy that cheered the valiant little ship even while frantically combing the seas to drag her down.

"Immediate Causes of Great War."

Oliver Perry Chitwood, professor of European history at the West Virginia University, contributes to the Babelish war literature "The Immediate Causes of the Great War" (Thomas Y. Crowell Company,) which is a careful review of the diplomatic literature, a searching amid official statements for the elusive truth, and arrives at the pointless conclusion of numerous unanswered questions; and upon these questions he comments oddly enough thus: "If we can find answers to all these questions we can accurately apportion the blame for the war so far as the immediate causes are concerned." But he fails to find, or to attempt, his answers. "The powers seem to have misunderstood each other; the game of bluff was carried too far. And thus it seems that the war was not only a crime but also a blunder"—and it seems that anyone who can contribute nothing more than that in this year 1917 of our Lord has scant business to be writing a book, for he is dancing upon ground thoroughly covered two years ago.

"The Rubbish Heap."

Rita in "The Rubbish Heap" (G. P. Putnam's Sons)—Rita being the pen name of Mrs. Desmond Humphreys—tells an old-fashioned melodramatic story with something of the modern restraint; and if one is inclined, one can pick all manner of flaws with the dovetailing of her complications.

To the English seaport of Prawle comes a young artist to live with his two maiden aunts. About the same time a sea captain has brought to his wife, who runs a second-hand store, a young girl from Ireland of whom nothing is known. Eventually the boy and girl meet a recluse artist who owns a small island near by and has forsworn social intercourse. It so happens that the boy discovers in a rubbish heap in the second-hand store letters written by his father which do much to unravel the mystery of the girl, of the recluse artist as well, and bring all the characters into tribulation and then happiness—but not the conventional happiness, for the boy and girl may not marry.

"All-of-a-Sudden Carmen."

Gustave Kobbe's "Modern Women," cynical and flashing short stories which brought to themselves a desirable amount of attention, scarcely prepare one for the fantastic and in a way idyllic "All-of-a-Sudden Carmen" (G. P. Putnam's Sons,) which being competently written, tells of a girl baby left at the stage door of a metropolitan operahouse and practically adopted by the entire company. Signora she is called, for there is no clew to her identity, no birthmarks, no moles on the back of her neck, no family jewels to pop up later in the story and bring the beautiful daughter and her unknown mater together. Yudels, general utility man for the company, takes Signora under his personal supervision, watches over her, worships her; but great divas and tenors are her foster parents, and the child lives behind the stage on terms of intimacy with everybody. On her first visit into the open air she thinks the trees, even the moon, are "properties," stage settings for a play; but though her education is hampered in that direction, she learns all the operas, all the music, unconsciously develops into a splendid artist, particularly favoring Carmen; so it happens that when the great artist who has made the role more valued than any singer before her flunks and fails to appear, Signora is thrust into the part, and all of a sudden becomes the greatest Carmen of the day.

"In Mizzoura."

Augustus Thomas's play, "In Mizzoura" (Sherman French, New York) was written for Nat Goodwin and was a great success in the 1890's. It has been newly added to the Publishers' Standard Library. In it we may find amazement at the pap upon which we feed in our youth. No problems, no sex, no uplift—just plain cut and dried heroism and villainy; a play even with "asides" and realistic grammar, with sturdy sacrifices and upstanding loyalty.

The sheriff withdraws from the race to the legislature so the father of Kate may have a clear field; the sheriff has furnished the money for Kate's education at the seminary—though she does not know it; the sheriff loves her so much that he resigns and then permits the train robber—whom Kate loves temporarily—to escape, and while the mob of indignant citizens are around the sheriff's home where he calmly keeps them at bay, Kate, having learned the whole truth, rushes in and tells the mob that the sheriff is a fine man, and that he did it all for her. And everybody cheers, cheers, cheers.

Ye gods! Shades of Ibsen. Also of Brieux and G. B. S. And yet—for all of its creaking machinery and stage heroics, there are ideals in the poor, crude characters, a loftiness that we of this day ridicule as nonexistent, as having never existed. Perhaps not. But in our youth we applauded those ideals. Now, and is it not perhaps significant, we laugh at them. The stage has barred them, and now we have the "intellectual" drama of morbidity, sexnerosis, psychoanalysis—and no ideals.

"A Handy Guide for Beggars."

Vachel Lindsay, who has of late mislaid the Nicholas he wore when General William Booth Entered Heaven and was not much easier to pronounce than the "Vachél" (rhymes with Rachel) is prominent among the ebullient youths of this decade, who, after the manner of the artistic temperament, think a little genuine originality is ample dispensation for a lot of smart aleckness. Mr. Lindsay is obsessed with the idea that he is clever. He is in a way. "General William Booth Enters Heaven" and "The Congo" are enough to make anybody proud of himself. But Mr. Lindsay's attempt to hallow the moving pictures (the title of the book, like the contents, being discarded by the memory) showed a superficiality that poets often betray when meddling with the heavier instruments of the psychological guild; and his "Handy Guide for Beggars" (The Macmillan Company) reveals a desire to be his own Boswell in a series of consciously romantic episodes among the Southeastern States, where Mr. Lindsay bummed and begged his way, offering poems for bread (as a previous book, less flippant, less Vachelish, described similar exploits in the Central Western States,) and, in the true manner of the beggar, he does his best to ridicule and make discreditable, any and all persons who did not accept him at his own quixotic value; and he has a blessing and a prayer for those that gave him shelter and a crust.

"The Hundredth Chance."

Ethel M. Dell, with care and detail, describes how a titled English maiden comes to marry the groom and stable manager of the lord who has sought, and continues to seek, her hand, and how she comes to love her husband devotedly. Jake Bolton is capable, honest, calm—inexorable. He loves Maud, and cares for her crippled brother, even offers to take into his home her mercenary and unnatural mother who has contracted a marriage of convenience with a drunken hotel proprietor, and urges the daughter to accept the lord and desert the groom. A melodramatic attempt at drugging and kidnaping put a throb into the text, though for the most part the story is told in an earnest and sound manner.

Bolton is a trainer of horses; his favorite colt is called "The Hundredth Chance," and it is by risking her life to save the colt that Maud reveals to Bolton—and to herself as well—that she really has come to love her husband. Bolton's position in the story is excellently maintained; without being gilded he is revealed as a man whom even such a maiden as Lady Maud could grow to love; and Lord Saltash, too, is drawn with dexterity, an exceptional scoundrel, more human than the usual villains that authors embalm between covers.

DECORATIVE ART.

DECORATIVE ELEMENTS IN ARCHITECTURE. By William Francklyn Paris. John Lane Company, New York.

"Decorative art is difficult and complex, and requires not only gifts of invention and taste, but profound technical knowledge. It is not an art based upon imagination only, but also one made of material realization. The decorator must not only possess the qualities of an artist and poet; he must besides rely on a sound common sense, a positive sense of the practical and a sound technique."

Mr. Paris considers architecture in its most widely inclusive definition: there is architecture in a chair as well as a cathedral, but the principles of each he believes are as eternal as most mundane things, and he has no patience with the bizarre and radical.

"The man who has made a life work of interior decoration, of blending line and color in a harmonious arrangement which will be unobtrusive and rest the eye, instead of putting it out, will be satisfied to follow in the wake of the artists and artisans who have passed the torch of good taste on from hand to hand through century after century. In such ephemeral things as bonnets and other articles of dress, radicalism may be condoned, as the harm done cannot be very lasting. But when it comes to the fashioning of appurtenances that must be lived with a whole life through, conservatism should rule. The beautiful lives everlastingly. The bizarre lives for a moment. . . . Art is a language, and while here and there it may gain a new word at intervals of a century or more, the fundamental vocabulary remains the same. Let us not try to coin new words, but rather to group and arrange the old words so as to produce a rhythmical measure, a new song, or a new poem. . . . It is no more plagiarism to take a carved panel from a sixteenth-century church door and make of it a dominant feature in a twentieth-century library table than it is to take a word from Sir Philip Sidney and incorporate it in an automobile prospectus. It is better to repeat some brilliant epigram of the ancients than to utter a brand-new platitude."

In the course of the book Mr. Paris explains why the artistic heritage of today represents the labor and study of yester centuries, and that it is no more originality to discard the heritage and "create" new art than it is to devise a new language in which to present a poem. All decorative art is close to nature's traceries. "The Egyptians went straight to nature for the inspiration of their chief ornament, the lotus. The Greeks of a later period adapted the acanthus leaf to their decorative needs, and the artists of the thirteenth century in creating the gorgeous monumental flora of the period were altogether inspired by plant life."

Mr. Paris gives attention to the principles and essentials of decorative art touching the peaks, so to speak, and coming down to the concrete in the illustrations of which there are ninety. Many chapters are given to tapestry, and we were surprised to discover that the Gobelin looms are still in existence and have been so continuously for nearly 300 years and have produced within the past twenty-five work comparable to their best. Attention is also given to painted glass (Mr. Paris disposes of the illusion that the ancients knew color secrets that have escaped us) and to wrought iron.

The book is a pleasant one to read. Swiftly and surely, with an illuminating remark ever ready, Mr. Paris moves about through all periods of art, pointing the defects in this, the excellence in that, explaining gracefully, and doing much to show that decoration is a fine art, as deeply grounded on aesthetic principles as any of the other arts.

ECONOMICS.

CONDITIONS OF LABOR IN AMERICAN INDUSTRIES. By W. Jett Lauck and Edgar Sydenstricker. Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York.

The authors say that "the present volume is designed to meet a practical need for a compact collection of the results of the large number of investigations and studies of conditions under which the American wage-earner and his family work and live. . . . The presentation of the data has been confined to the conditions of wage-earners in manufacturing and mining industries because comparable data for workers in trade (with some exceptions,) transportation and agriculture, have not been found available. . . . The result is a statement, rather than a description, of some of the fundamental conditions of labor in modern industry in the United States, which, it is hoped, will prove useful to the student, be he in the classroom or in his vocation, employer or employee, business man, social worker or legislator."

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

Perennial Favorite.

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" has just returned to the press for its fifty-first reprinting. Few writers have attained so wide a popularity on the reputation of their first book as has Mrs. Rice. When she, then Alice Hegan, called in 1901 at the offices of the Century Company to make the acquaintance of the editors who had just accepted her story, she was practically unknown except in the limited circle of her Louisville friends. She had spent many hours among the poor of that city, and out of her experiences she had written a book. In September, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" was published in a modest edition of 2000 copies. Within a month a second edition was needed. This continued every month, until in January, the month in which the book world is practically moribund, an edition of 10,000 was imperative. Today "Mrs. Wiggs" has become a family word in every quarter of the globe. Mrs. Rice, when traveling in India, found copies of her book there and saw a performance of its dramatization.

Naval Story by Joseph Pettee Copp.

An interesting fiction offering in the American Boy for June is "Joe Carson, Apprentice," by Joseph Pettee Copp of Los Angeles. This is a serial story of a boy's experiences in the United States Navy, and the first installment appears in the June issue of this leading magazine for boys. Written by one who served in the Orient just after the Spanish War, the story is full of interesting and exciting adventures, and gives an excellent description of life in the navy.

New Books.

Little, Brown & Co. published the following books recently: "Half Hours with the Idiot," by John Kendrick Bangs; a new edition of Owen Johnson's famous baseball story, "The Humming Bird;" a limited edition of Thomas Godfrey's "The Prince of Parthia," the first American tragedy, with introduction by Archibald Henderson; "How to Produce Amateur Plays," by Barrett H. Clark, and "Kitchenette Cookery," by Anna Merritt East, formerly New Housekeeping editor of the Ladies' Home Journal.

More New Books.

The following books were published this month by Houghton Mifflin Company: "The Heart of the Balkans," by Demetra Vaka; "Inheritance Taxes for Investors," by Hugh Bancroft; Henry Cabot Lodge's "War Addresses, 1915-1917;" "Is Civilization a Disease?" by Stanton Coit; "Letters and Writings of James G. Croswell;" "Watching and Waiting on the Border," by Roger Batchelder; "Hints on Landscape Gardening," by Prince Von Puckler Muskau, edited by Samuel Parsons; "The Reserve Officers' Handbook," by Capt. J. S. Sutherland, and "The Little Days" by Augusta Gill.

"Russian Memoirs."

"Dostoyevsky called on me one afternoon," says Madame Olga Novikoff in her book "Russian Memories," "and began talking of his life in Siberia, and the wonderfully beneficial effect it had had upon him. We were interrupted by a flippant young dandy, just arrived from abroad, who chattered animatedly about his impressions of various ballets and theaters. I thought he would never stop and felt rather angry. Dostoyevsky, however, listened attentively, his wonderful, dark, velvet eyes, with the deep expression so peculiar to them, fixed kindly on the gossiper. After a while he remarked: "I am interested in what you say. There is life in you, artistic instinct and good nature. If you could spend thirteen years in a Siberian prison, as I have done, it would be most beneficial to you and might make you a useful, energetic member of society."

An O. Henry Recruit.

How strongly the enthusiasm for O. Henry in England is, may be gauged by a recent letter from Isaac F. Marcosson, correspondent and author, to a friend. It reads:

"The most striking revelation after the progress of the war that confronts me is the fact that England has gone O. Henry mad. When I left London last September the virus had begun to work. Now there is an epidemic. You will be interested to know that one of the strongest rooters here is Sir James M. Barrie, who told me the other night that he had given a complete set of the books to Mr. Asquith. I lunched yesterday with E. V. Lucas, who is now editing Punch, and who takes a particular delight in being 'the original O. Henry man.' And so it goes!"

A New Book by Mark Twain.

"What Is Man? and Other Essays," a new book by Mark Twain, is published this week by the Harper's. This new volume contains material never before published for sale in book form in this country. The essay which gives the book its title was published privately by Mark Twain under a pseudonym, to be distributed among his friends. Like his recently-published book, "The Mysterious Stranger," it reveals a new side of Mark Twain. In it he dwells upon his belief that the inevitable life sequence began with the first created spark. Most of the other essays have appeared in periodicals at various times. These are: "Death of Jean," "History Lessons," "A Curious Episode," "The Turning Point of My Life," "At the Shrine of St. Wagner," "English as She Is Taught," "William Dean Howells," "Carl Schurz, Pilot," "Switzerland," "The Empress of Austria," and "As Concerns Interpreting the Deity."

"This Is the End!"

"This Is the End" is the altogether unusual title of Stella Benson's new book (published May 9th) Miss Benson will be remembered as the author of "I Pose," a novel which was issued last year and won warm commendation from the critics because of the originality and humor of both the theme and treatment. "This Is the End" is possessed of those same qualities which made for the success of the first book and it will serve materially to strengthen the author's position in modern fiction.

Georg Brandes on the War.

"The World at War" is the title of a significant book by Georg Brandes which appears May 9 in a translation by Catherine D. Groth. Dr. Brandes is perhaps the only great neutral writer of the present hour and what he has to say, therefore, about the war comes with a very special importance.

The volume opens with a few articles written before the war which have proved to be strikingly prophetic. From these it passes on to a consideration of various aspects of the conflict and concludes with a statement as to what the basis of a lasting peace must be. Throughout Dr. Brandes writes fearlessly and with a burning sense of justice, not permitting himself to be prejudiced in any one direction.

Lord Dunsany.

Lord Dunsany, who is now at the front, lately wrote to an American magazine an expression of his simple faith in the war. "To some of you in America," he said, "this may seem an unnecessary and wasteful quarrel, as other people's quarrels often are; but it comes to this—that though we are all killed, there will be songs again; but if we were to submit and so survive, there could be neither songs nor dreams, nor any joyous free things any more."

"An Intimate History of Journalism."

This subtitle fairly characterizes "The Street of Ink," a new book by H. Simonis, with eighty portraits and other illustrations. Fleet Street, London, is the one referred to, where printing presses abound and whence go out over Great Britain such enormous quantities of the printed page. In the words of Mr. Simonis, "the history of every paper, be it London, or provincial, is a romance of enterprise, the reading of which could not fail to uplift and encourage the ambitious young man, for whose benefit, as well as for that of every journalist who is proud of his work, this book is written." It naturally follows that there are many such romances recounted here, which are both interesting and inspiring, while the personalities involved in them are fascinating.

"RHYTHMUS."

The newest theorist-poet to couch a lance at the poetical tradition is Harold W. Gammans, whose "Common Men and Women" has just been published by the Four Seas Company in their Contemporary Series. The author has written a long expository introduction about his medium, collected a score of his successful experiments in it, and designed a striking cover for the book.

Unlike the rebels who announce that vers libre is the only poetry and the conservatives who insist that it is only prose, but very like Padraic Colum, who is impressed by the body of English literature which is strictly neither poetry nor prose, Mr. Gammans takes the position of "common men and women" that there is nothing to prevent the existence of an intermediate form "which is not blank verse, nor any other, nor prose," but which is good and natural and sincere, and which has persisted for many centuries and which was used in the nineteenth by a large number of excellent writers. This form he names rhythmus.

AMERICA'S RESPONSE.

America is moving, and America is in earnest. Neither fear nor vainglory is the impelling motive, but a gradually deepening sense of what is at stake—what is, in Lincoln's phrase, either to be "nobly won or meanly lost." He called it "the last, best hope of the earth," meaning thereby human freedom and the full enjoyment of liberty by every nation. That something corresponding to this is involved in the struggle upon which this country has entered, the plain people of the United States are now well convinced. They see a chance to strike down military autocracy, and to obtain a peace which will be lasting, because established by the free consent of self-governing peoples. It is for these objects that Americans are willing to endure all necessary hardships, holding nothing back. And to prophets of evil who talk of possible defeat in the high emprise, they would say, as the final indication of their good hope, in the words of Coleridge: "Do you ask us to believe that this world is governed by the devil?"—[The Nation, New York.

Gorged on Flowers.

Unless you have seen those scarves for men—those scarves of Japanese challis—you have no idea how bold the masculine taste is waxing. Gorgeous, are they, as gorgeous as though fairly gorged on flowers—for they are flared with flowers, in every possible color and shade. Not modest violetish flowers, born to blush unseen, but bold, flaunting hydrangeous kinds of bloom, which look as though they had painted their cheeks with rainbows, and lip-sticked in poignant pinks and purples. One is almost lead to fear that scarves like those might crinkle the edge of even the firmest of masculine morality! And yet, who knows? Possibly they are safer than the milder, more insidious sorts.

Shoe Tops.

Most novel are the shoe-tops which have recently appeared. They are not "rubber"—as you may have supposed; but silk basketcloth and cloth of finer silken mesh. The colors, always in contrast to the vamps of leather, are dainty tones of green, delicate blues and pinks, and even clear, bright yellows. Leathers, also, have taken unto themselves new tints, as if to vie with the shades in sports goods. Tops are as high as ever, and so are prices, in the most novel modes, although the more practical of boots have reached a lower level of cost.

Dower Silver.

Earnest of the treasures within the store, is that fine display of solid silver in the spacious windows of that big jewelry store on Broadway. Solid silver! From time immemorial has this formed the wedding gift de luxe. And the massive pieces shown, revivals of patterns antique and honored, replicas of celebrated pieces, modern interpretations, of the classical, are such as to elicit admiration from all who contemplate either the giving or the reception of bridal gifts. The setting, upon handsome tables, with backgrounds consisting of exquisite paintings and rich draperies, is such as to bring out the rare beauty of the wares.

PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE.
NOTED ASTROLOGER AND PALMIST OF NATIONAL FAME AND REPUTATION.
STUDIO PARLORS, 621 S. BROADWAY.
A RESIDENT OF LOS ANGELES 31 YEARS.

PROF. ALTHOUSE is an experienced practitioner in the science of modern ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The horoscope shows the powerful influence of the planets in ALL AFFAIRS OF LIFE. It shows disease, deaths, love and marriage, financial affairs, investments, changes, talents, environments, about children, relatives, when and where to travel, who to seek or avoid, when in danger of losses, troubles, etc., etc. Also your good periods coming—GIVING DATES of these events for the FUTURE.

PROF. ALTHOUSE read E. H. Sothern, Nat Goodwin, Schumann-Heink, Gadski, Admiral Schley, David Starr Jordan, ex-Gov. Pardee, ex-Senator Clark, Senator Smoot, Baron Rothschild, Gen. Chaffee, Edison, Sousa, Modjeska, Capt. Hobson, Julia Marlowe, Anna Held, Jefferson, Sembrich, Lillian Russell, Calve, Admiral Evans, H. E. Huntington, etc. EXPERT PALM READER. READINGS BY MAIL.

DR. J. A. LARSON writes: "Your reading was the most satisfactory I ever had in my life. I know a great deal about these sciences, and I consider your work is the most THOROUGH and RELIABLE of any reader in the United States."

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S wonderful proficiency in the casting of HOROSCOPES and in HAND readings has brought him a LARGE and SUCCESSFUL PRACTICE. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances. Personal attention given. STRICT PRIVACY. HIGHEST GRADE OF WORK that skill and many years' experience can produce. HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.

Daily and evenings, Sundays, 10 to 4.
STUDIO PARLORS, 621 S. BROADWAY.

PERSONAL— AN HONEST PROPOSITION.
If you are DOUBTFUL or SKEPTICAL as to what a genuine PSYCHIC-PALMIST can do, go today. Bring this statement and MR. P. H. KEAN, M.P., will give you a thorough test of his PSYCHIC knowledge absolutely free of charge. KEAN will offer suggestions and give help to all who are in trouble and suspense concerning their personal affairs of life. Scientific palmistry will reveal to you your weak points, strong characteristics, future possibilities, what you are best fitted for in life, etc. Do you know that 98 per cent. of the successful men and women of today in the affairs of life, such as business, love, marriage, etc., are guided psychically either through the development of their own intuitive force or through the aid of a Professional Psychic? The day of Psychic-Phenomena, as a fad, fiction and experiment has passed. The reliable psychic-palmist of today is consulted on the material affairs and obstacles of life with the same degree of feeling and confidence that you would consult your lawyer, doctor, banker or broker. Psychology as a science today is to the human being what the Government Weather Bureau is to the community and KEAN is to Psychology what Edison is to Electricity. Forget what you are or were, and begin to plan what you may become. This is your hour, make the most of it. Delay is your worst enemy. When you lose your time it is gone forever. You can't regain it. Knowledge is power. Knowledge opens the door that ignorance would forever close. Life is not half so bad as some people would make you believe, so do not lose hope because the day seems dark and the affairs of life are mixed. No matter how complicated your condition may be, KEAN can and will aid you. Know the truth. Know in time what to do and how to do it. KEAN points the way. KEAN'S best endorsement is an interview with KEAN. KEAN'S fees for readings are within the reach of all. KEAN can only be consulted at his residence, 2403 South Grand ave., Los Angeles. Hours, 10 to 6, daily and Sunday.

Try Spiritualism.
REV. MADAME ZENDA,
Ordained Medium.
Do the Dead Return?
Madame Zenda says: "There is no necessity of the dead returning, as they are ever present about us, though unseen by mortal eyes."
HER WORK IS HER RELIGION.
She is not a mystic, she uses no cabinet, no darkened room, no burning incense, but courteously receives her callers in plain open light and at once impresses them with the sincerity of her purpose—to help and advise them.
To those in sorrow, doubt and distress, Madame Zenda offers her services.
She has helped many to happiness and success. Why not you? If YOU FEEL the impulse to call, OBEY THAT IMPULSE—CALL AT ONCE. Hours 9 to 9 daily. Special sittings, 25c. 1824 S. VAN NESS AVE. Take W. Washington or 16th st. cars. Phone West 3230.

CONSULT CLARKE.
Ordained Phenomenal Psychic and Healer.
50C. LOW FEE THIS WEEK. 50C

The world's greatest thinkers declare that the success or failure of the individual depends upon the degree of development of his latent mental powers—that each individual carries with him the best solution of the problem which he presents.

Through long years of work and study Prof. Clarke has so developed his spiritual self that things which are obscure and hidden to others are as clear to him as an open book. He offers his services to those who are in doubt or trouble; ill in mind or body; who are failing to realize what they desire.

For a short time only this remarkable psychic has consented to offer his services to the public for a nominal consideration. To all who bring this advertisement this week he will give his regular full $2 reading for 50c.

Many of the best people have come—Many who have never consulted a psychic before. Why? Because he intelligently unravels their trouble; gives truthful information, relief, success and satisfaction; gives knowledge that is power. There may be a better position, better salary or business for you—perhaps you are waiting for something you will never realize.

Call today—tomorrow may be too late.
Office hours, 9 a.m. to 8 p.m.
Permanently located in his own home.
Wilshire 2956. 638 S. ALVARADO ST. 556181.

WANTED— Y.M.C.A.
VOCATIONAL-EMPLOYMENT DEPARTMENT.
Most of our calls have been for men under 35.
The Call to the Colors is going to be a constant drain upon the supply of young men. Qualified men in Clerical, Technical and Commercial lines up to 55 are going to be in demand.
Any male from 16 to 55 can take out his membership in this Association, costing but $5 a year, and register in this department. If he does not secure employment within a reasonable period same will be refunded. No fees nor commission. The services of this department continue during the entire year.
Our only excuse for existence is that we serve men, and your only reasonable excuse for securing employment through the Y. M. C. A. is that you are a member of it.
Our problem is to get men, not positions. We have calls for men from 18 to 80 in the following lines: Houseman, bus boys, messenger boys 18 to 80, pipe fitters, grocery clerks, ranch hands, blacksmith, carpenter, man and wife on ranch, auto mechanics, machinists, stenographers, asst. shipping clerk, warehouseman, chauffeurs and truck drivers, auto repair men, book-keeper, clerk, dry goods, foreman repair shop, machinists-lathe, vulcanizers, sheet metal workers, house mechanic, ignition specialist, draftsman and boys, 17 to 20.

WANTED — STENOGRAPHERS, OFFICE MEN. Mine book-keeper and ore settlement clerk, Arizona mine, $150-$175, man with knowledge of stenography preferred; stenographer, Arizona bank, $100; stenographer, railroad tariff experience, $75; checker and assistant shipping clerk, $50; young hotel clerical man with executive ability, $70; BOY WITH WHEEL, $30; BOY FOR OFFICE, $30-$40; railroad division accountant, $120; young stock clerk, automobile experience, $40-$50; registrations from accountants, clerical men and book-keepers desirous of locating permanently in Southern California and Arizona. CALIFORNIA COMMERCIAL SERVICE, Brockman Bldg. Agency.

WANTED—GOOD, SOBER, RELIABLE MEN, nonusers of liquor or tobacco, for work on the largest ostrich farm in the country. Men who can do levelling, irrigating, plowing, cultivating, fresno'ng, fence building, hay making and any or all kinds of labor, and who will stay at least four months, will be paid good wages and a bonus of 10 per cent. of their wages at the expiration of the time. For good men to the number of 25 there is a job open the entire year. We don't care where you are from or who your ancestors were if you are clean-cut and dependable, we can use you so long as you deliver the goods. Address LOCK BOX 435, BRAWLEY, CAL.

WANTED—SALESMEN. WE WILL HAVE AN opening for two more real salesmen—men who will work and follow instruction—within a few days. Experience not absolutely necessary. Men of good address and willing to work will find business good in connection with our big new subdivision, as it is close to Los Angeles Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., also the new Union Oil refinery and distribution plant. Get in now! Don't wait until the cream has been skimmed off. Three excursions each week; lectures; lunches; closers to assist. See Preston or Swisher, Monday or Wednesday. Subdivision Department, W. I. HOLLINGSWORTH & CO., 412 Hollingsworth Bldg.

WANTED—LACK OF CONFIDENCE AND INDIFference prevent thousands of boys and girls from reaching that magic goal, success. I want to encourage these young people, to bring home to them a realization of their obligations to themselves and to society. A little more "pep" girls, more life, more ginger. Answer your problem for yourself. Do not take advice from anyone who offers a negative thought. Success is yours if you will reach out for it. Your "ship" will come in, but you must be the pilot. There is a big demand for telegraph operators, stenographers and book-keepers. Just before going to press with this ad, Miss Clark, of the Remington Typewriter Co., placed an order with me for five young men stenographers. In each case the salary is $125 per month. We have ten calls for every competent student we can turn out. Make up for the time you have wasted in the past by enrolling Monday. Write for free catalogue. FRANK D. MACKAY, Mgr. The BELMONT Apts. Figueroa at 10th st.
The BELCAMP Apts. 2407 W. Ninth st.

Several elements enter into the making of one's happiness and content, and one of the most important is one's home and surroundings. That's why we try to make each of our houses, to each of our guests, in every sense of the word,

"The place like home."

For, we reason, if we succeed in making our apartments "homelike" we have gone a long way toward making our guests happy and contented. And in making our guests happy and contented we create a successful business. A selfish reason, perhaps, but the end is good. Be that as it may, however, it's the reason behind our unceasing efforts to satisfy the individual needs and desires of our several guests. "Not how little, but how much we can give our guests," is our motto.

If this appeals to YOU, would it not be worth your time and trouble to call and learn just what we can do for you?

INVESTIGATE!

It makes no difference whether you are going to spend one hundred dollars or one thousand dollars when you purchase a motor car. It is up to you to see that you get your money's worth. The only possible way that this can be done is for you to compare the different values in today's paper. We court comparison and investigation as to our methods of doing business and it certainly will cost you nothing to do so. Of course, when you only go to see those cars which are advertised at the lowest possible price you must know you are not using good business judgment, as price does not constitute a bargain. While we believe that our prices are as low as any in today's paper, there may be rare instances where you will find a given car advertised below market value, but do not overlook the fact that a car that is usually sold below market is also below average in condition. Our business is the sale of new CHANDLER SIXES. We do not expect to make a profit out of these used cars. We do intend to move them rapidly. Therefore, if you will look our stock over there is no doubt but that you will be convinced that the prices are absolutely right, if the cars are in average condition. We claim and can prove that the ones we offer you for sale are far above the average after we have thoroughly overhauled them, and we are so well satisfied as to their excellent condition that we are offering one of the most liberal guarantees ever placed before the public on each car sold.

Here are a few of the many cars which we have in stock. If the following do not meet with your requirements, you should at least phone us and allow us to tell you of the many other similar bargains.

TERMS ON ALL CARS.

CHANDLER SIX touring, 1917 model, absolutely in first-class condition; five excellent tires; special plate glass curtains, and run but 6000 miles $1150

We can offer you this type of car at as low as $1100 and up to $1250, depending on the mileage each particular car has been driven.

CHANDLER SIX touring, 1916 model, carrying the same equipment as the car described above $900

This car is an exceptional car. We have 1916 models as low as $750.

CHANDLER SIX touring, 1915 model, fully equipped and absolutely the best 1915 car we have ever offered for sale. The mileage on it is exceptionally low. The price is $775

We have these cars as low as $600.

Oldsmobile touring, 1916, never been repainted and shows the excellent care it has been given. Fully equipped and a positive bargain at...$800

Haynes, 1916 touring car, fully equipped, and while it doesn't need overhauling, we will take pleasure in doing this subject to your own instructions $850

1916 Buick Light Six, fully equipped, partly new casings, and a bargain at $825

1916 Overland roadster, will be delivered to you in first-class condition in every respect. This is the Model 83 that costs two and one-half times as much as we are asking for it..$350

1916 King 8 touring car, thoroughly refinished; has excellent casings, and positively is as good as a new car $875

For Sale—An almost new Moon touring car, run just 6000 miles, and practically perfect. This is a wonderful opportunity at........$750

1916 Willys-Knight touring car, new casings, and one that it will be hard for you to tell from a new car $800

1915 Hudson Light Six touring car, wire wheels, excellent casings, thoroughly rebuilt, repainted, and an exceedingly classy car. We have 1915 Hudsons as low as $575, but for this one, which is an exception, the price is..........$850

Cadillac, 1914 touring car. This machine has never been overhauled or repainted, yet it is positively in the best possible condition. If you can find a single thing to be done on it, we will be glad to do it for you and the price will still be $600

Cadillac, 7-passenger, 1913 model, fully equipped and to be delivered to you fully guaranteed, $425

—MANY OTHERS—

NOTE—All of the above cars are electrically lighted and started, and we have many more of them both with or without starters, and ranging in prices from as low as $150 for a 1911 Chalmers, Toy Tonneau Touring Car, to $1250 for an almost new CHANDLER SIX. Regardless of the condition of your purse, we are certain to have something to suit you. Whether you are in the market for a car like the Chalmers or one like the CHANDLER, we shall endeavor to sell you one that will give you absolute service.

We have over five hundred satisfied used-car owners in this city. There are undoubtedly a few of them in your immediate neighborhood. Come in and see us. We will open our books and let you select any of the names of former purchasers therein, and you will learn for yourself that our guarantee and service, plus several other features, which we do not care to state in an open advertisement for our competitors' benefit, are worth real dollars to you. If you can see any way that we do not absolutely protect the persons who do business with us, we would be glad to add that feature when you make your purchase. Terms. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m., or phone us for demonstration at Main 3459, or 60895. USED CAR DEPARTMENT of the CHANDLER SIX, 1136 S. Olive st.

FOR SALE—IF YOU ARE IN THE MARKET for an automobile at least do yourself the favor to investigate our stock. We have been selling the new CHANDLER SIXES so rapidly and the demand has been so great, that we have been in a position to pick and choose the used cars which we have accepted on new Chandlers. Owing to the fact that it has been almost impossible for us to fill all of the orders on new sales, we have not accepted any used cars in trade unless the price of these used cars was absolutely right. Therefore, when we offer them to you, you are certain to find them below market value, considering the excellent condition that we place all of these used cars in before we offer them for sale. We do not accept a car unless it is, or can be, put in the best possible mechanical condition. So, before you make your purchase, be sure to look over the forty other different types and models which we are offering for sale at our two used-car departments of the CHANDLER SIX. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Phones: 60895, or Main 3459.
1136 S. OLIVE. 1084 S. MAIN.

FOR SALE—PIERCE-ARROW LITTLE SIX, CORD tires, two extras, mechanically perfect; $500; terms. This is the first time you have ever seen such a high-grade car at this ridiculously low figure. It is not the condition of the car that makes us offer such a tremendous reduction, but owing to the fact that we are selling CHANDLER SIXES so rapidly, we must make room for the many other exceptional bargains that are being offered to us as part payment on new CHANDLERS. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Phone Main 3459. Used Car Dept. No. 2, EARL V. ARMSTRONG, INC., 1084 S. Main.

FOR SALE—1916 OLDSMOBILE, 4-CYLINDER, run about 5000 miles, in first-class mechanical condition in every respect, including excellent tires, electric starter, etc., and fully guaranteed. Terms $650

This car is practically as good as new, and while it has never been repainted, its appearance is perfect. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Phone Main 3459. Used Car Dept., No. 2, EARL V. ARMSTRONG, INC., 1084 S. Main.

FOR SALE—OVERLAND TOURING CAR, 1914 model, electrically lighted and started, in perfect condition and easily worth $100 more than we are asking for it. Price $300; terms. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Phone Main 3459. Used Car Dept., No. 2, EARL V. ARMSTRONG, INC., 1084 S. Main.

FOR SALE—1916 STUDEBAKER, FOUR-CYLINder, electrically lighted and started, seven-passenger touring car, with new tires and a positive guarantee that it has been thoroughly rebuilt and overhauled. $550. FOR SALE—STUDEBAKER TOURING CAR, ELECtrically lighted and started, seven-passenger. Don't think because the price is low that this car is not in good condition. We will demonstrate it anywhere. $250; terms. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Phone Main 3459. Used Car Dept. No. 2, EARL V. ARMSTRONG, INC., 1084 S. Main.

FOR SALE—CHALMERS 30, TOY TONNEAU, 1911 model, in very good condition, $150. This is the best model Chalmers that was ever built by the Chalmers Company, and certainly is a steal at the price. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Phone Main 3459. Used Car Dept. No. 2, EARL V. ARMSTRONG, INC., 1084 S. Main.

FOR SALE—OVERLAND, 1915 TOURING, ELECtrically lighted and started, with six excellent casings, and way below the market price at $350. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Phone Main 3459. Used Car Dept. No. 2, EARL V. ARMSTRONG, INC., 1084 S. Main.

FOR SALE—1916 OVERLAND ROADSTER, NEW casings, electrically lighted and started, and fully guaranteed. Will be offered at this price, for three days only, $350. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Phone Main 3459. Used Car Dept. No. 2, EARL V. ARMSTRONG, INC., 1084 S. Main.

FOR SALE—BUICK TOURING CAR. THIS MAchine has at least 3 years' good service in it at a minimum of expense. You ought not to spend a dollar on it for mechanical repairs for at least a year. At the exceptionally low price of $225, it should be snapped up by a speculator. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Phone Main 3459. Used Car Dept. No. 2, EARL V. ARMSTRONG, INC., 1084 S. Main.

FOR SALE — ABBOTT-DETROIT, 7-PASSENGER touring car, in perfect condition. You must see this car to appreciate it. It is easily worth double what we are asking and will make somebody an excellent truck or tow car, however, the body is in such good condition that it would be a shame to change it. Price $250; terms. Open Sundays, 11 to 4 p.m. Phone Main 3459. Used Car Dept. No. 2, EARL V. ARMSTRONG, INC., 1084 S. Main.

POULTRY—POULTRY SUPPLIES
For Sale, Exchange, Wanted.

FOR SALE—
GERMAIN'S POULTRY COLUMN
CHANGED EVERY WEEK.

Watch this column for seasonable supplies for poultry, turkeys, ducks, rabbits, goats, bees, etc. We will also offer one EXTRA SPECIAL each week.

FOR POULTRY.

COULSON'S FOODS produce excellent results. Keep Coulson's Egg Food before hens all the time; feed Coulson's Scratch Food morning and night.

DARLING'S MEAT CRISPS contains unusually high percentage of food value—60 per cent. protein. One feeding a day of Meat Crisps will produce surprising results. Cheaper than meat scraps.

OCULUM will keep your hens healthy. It kills disease germs, cures roup, cholera, white diarrhea and other diseases prevalent among fowls. It also tends to increase the size of the bird and is highly recommended for this purpose. Trial bottles 10 cents.

SEMI-SOLID BUTTERMILK—The United States government advises the use of buttermilk in poultry raising, because it keeps the digestive organs of fowls in proper working order. Semi-Solid Buttermilk is buttermilk in a concentrated form, and therefore much more effective.

FRENCH'S POULTRY MUSTARD is a necessity to successful poultry raising. It increases the stamina and fertility of the hen and makes her produce more eggs.

BLATCHFORD'S MILK MASH is the most satisfactory food for baby chicks. It is a scientifically prepared food that keeps their tender digestive organs in proper condition.

INSECTICIDES.

CARBOLA is a disinfecting, germ-killing white paint. Use it instead of whitewash on chicken coops, stables, hog pens, etc. Will not flake or peel off.

CARBOLINEUM—One application of this powerful disinfectant will keep your coops, nests and roosts free from lice and vermin for a whole year.

CONKEY'S LICE LIQUID will positively kill mites. Conkey's Lice Powder can be dusted on fowls and will rid them of lice.

ACCESSORIES.

We have a large line of automatic feeders and fountains, at a wide range of prices.

GERMAIN'S EXTRA SPECIALS.

We have just secured a limited number of TENNESSEE GRIST MILLS for grinding poultry food, as well as flours for household use, which we can sell at the extremely low price of $2.50. This is an opportunity to beat the high cost of living by grinding your own flour for table use.

CLOVER CUTTERS at a 20 per cent. saving. Do not give your hens clover that has not been chopped up as it causes crop binding. Use a clover chopper and be assurred that your fowls are getting this highly nutritious food in the correct form.

FOR PIGEONS.

Use FIBER PIGEON NESTS or TOBACCCO STEMS and be assured of germproof nests. Keep out the germs and vermin and increase your profits. Best results obtained if pigeon house is painted with Carbola—a germ-destroying white paint.

Large galvanized iron pigeon baths at 75 cents each. Also automatic feeders and fountains. We have one style of fountain that is especially attractive, as well as very efficient—a float fountain with pottery top.

FOR GOATS.

We recommend Blatchford's Lamb Meal for baby goats. For the benefit of goat fanciers we take subscriptions to the "Goat World"—an authority on the subject. We also have a limited number of copies of the well known book "Goat Keeping for Amateurs."

EGGS FOR HATCHING.

We can furnish you with all the varieties of hen eggs, also bronze turkey and duck eggs, from reliable raisers only. We also have boxes for shipping eggs. Prices on application.

RELIABLE BOOKS.

We have practical books giving authentic information on the following subjects:

Poultry, Turkeys, Ducks, Pigeons, Goats, Rabbits, Bees, Birds, Dogs and Cats.

For a short time only we are offering Mrs. A. Basley's "Western Poultry Book" at 50 cents. Regular price $1. Gives practical information on poultry and turkey raising.

FOR SALE — START CHICKS RIGHT. THE first few weeks is the critical time. Then Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a serves an excellent purpose. Let the little chicks have it regularly, so they will digest and assimilate their food. Nothing else you can do will help so much to get them safely past the time when diarrhoea and bowel trouble kill off little chicks by the score. If you do not find it makes and keeps chicks healthy and makes them grow faster and develop better, just return the empty packages to the dealer and get your money back. For sale by all dealers in poultry supplies.

LICE KILL thousands of little chicks. Get a package of Dr. Hess Instant Louse Killer. Start your louse battle early, which will mean chick contentment all summer long. For sale by all dealers in poultry supplies. Guaranteed.

FOR SALE—

DO YOUR BIT.

Nobody wants to be a slacker. Help your country in the present crisis by giving your spare time to raising poultry. Patriotic societies everywhere advocate raising MORE CHICKENS in order to conserve the supply of meat and increase the supply of eggs.

White Leghorn chicks will be broilers in ten weeks. Pullets lay at five months. NO TROUBLE TO RAISE.

One hundred White Leghorn chicks from heavy laying stock with fireless brooder, $9 per hundred during June and $10 per hundred during July. Safe arrival guaranteed; pay on delivery. Full instructions for raising with every order.

MINING—

THERE WAS A MAN WHO HAD A MINE,
Upon which he sank a shaft,
And when he reached the Botton,
"His Neighbors" how they laughed.
For then he found the ore was gone,
Not a color did he get.
In fact it was a "true, dry hole,"
As it wasn't even "wet."
He could not pay his neighbors back,
The "free advice" they'd lent,
For now, poor chap, he's busted,
And hasn't got a cent.
But, if he ever gets the chance again,
No knowing, perhaps he will,
You can bet $5 to a lone red cent,
He will use an "Okell Drill."

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION—

THE ART OF SINGING.
You have inherited a musical instrument known as the voice, it requires no tuning, stringing or repairs and cannot be purchased on the installment plan. It requires only a little intelligent study, time and money to equip you to take your place as a vocal artist, that will give you much pleasure as well as help dispel that awful mental anguish through which our country is passing. We all should do our share to help humanity. If you have a voice you should learn to use it correctly. There is a constant demand for good singers and I gladly recommend my students to dignified places when they are qualified. I am giving special rates for the summer and can accept a limited number of pupils. Voices tried free of charge any afternoon. Suite 207-208 Blanchard Hall. Home Phone 10082. JOSEPH NEVLIN WEYBARK.

"AMERICAN FACTORY REBUILT" TYPEWRITERS

(Not Second-hand or Shop Repaired)

REBUILT in our OWN FACTORIES by skilled MECHANICS by the same process that a new machine is built, from the frame up. That is why they cost a LITTLE MORE and are WORTH A GREAT DEAL MORE than the fixed-up, shop-repaired machines offered by the second-hand dealer. QUALITY considered, our prices are the LOWEST in the United States.

SEEING IS BELIEVING; drop in and look over our complete stock of all makes; prices range from $15 up; see our show windows; you'll be surprised at the BARGAINS WE OFFER.
WRITE! TELEPHONE! CALL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR ENGINEERS.

Announce Recommendations for Commissions.

Preference for Construction and Railroad Men.

War Department to Consider Reserve Selections.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, June 2.—Col. J. B. Cavanaugh of the Eighth Reserve Engineers announced today that he had recommended to the engineers' division of the War Department, that commissions be issued as follows:

Joseph W. Williams, of Ross, Cal., to be major. Williams is chief engineer of construction for the Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company.

Paul Reisinger, Clifton, Ariz., captain and adjutant. Reisinger is a graduate of West Point, a former officer of the regular army, and now chief engineer and superintendent of Arizona and New Mexico Railway Company.

Morton Russell, of Berkeley, was recommended as captain of A Company. Russell has been for nearly twelve years in the construction department of the Southern Pacific, and prior thereto was an officer of the regular army. Harry L. Kile of Sacramento, engineer and road master of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, is recommended for first lieutenant; Arthur T. Schunck of Berkeley, assistant engineer of the Northwestern Pacific, and now with the Army Engineering Corps, is recommended for similar grade; Thomas H. Darrow, of Oakland, for many years superintendent of bridge construction for the Southern Pacific Company in the West, is recommended for second lieutenant.

For B Company, Bert J. Simmons, of Needles, Cal., division engineer of the Santa Fe Railroad, is recommended for captain. His first lieutenants will be, if the department approves, Donald E. Rhivers of Ogden, Utah, and Alsa C. Howard of the Presidio, San Francisco. The former has been superintendent of construction for the Utah Construction Company and was a member of the force of student officers now at the Presidio, until transferred to the engineers. The latter has been a sergeant of engineers, and has had nine years experience in that branch of the service. John G. Howell of Los Angeles is recommended for second lieutenant. Howell has been supervisor of track for the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad Company.

The tentative appointments for C Company, include Charles C. Cragin of San Francisco, for captain. Cragin formerly was division engineer of the Chicago, Milwaukee and Puget Sound Railroad Company, and now a constructing engineer. The first lieutenants are to be Hugh L. Wiley of San Francisco and Carl E. Morest of Willows, Cal. Wiley has been a resident engineer with the Canadian Pacific Railway and is now a contracting engineer. Morest has been general foreman of bridges and buildings for the construction department of the Northwestern Railroad Company.

The second lieutenant will be Seymour H. Phelan, of Santa Barbara, if the department approves. Phelan was formerly a roadmaster for the Southern Pacific Company.

Large Turnover.

HEAVY TRADING ON LOCAL EXCHANGE.

YELLOW PINE CONTINUES A FEATURE.

Extra Dividend Announcement Sends Prices Higher—Better Demand for Boss—Oatmans are Dull—General Petroleum Records Sharp Advance.

Trading on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange was exceptionally heavy yesterday morning and all classes of securities were in demand. Yellow Pine was again the feature and the stock advanced to a high of 1.87½ on the announcement of an extra dividend of 3 per cent. by the directors, the same to be paid to stockholders on the 25th inst., books closing on June 15. A large number of small holders took advantage of the high prices that were offered for the stock to take their profits, which forced final dealings down to 1.80½. There was a fair call for Boss and 600 shares changed hands at 1.16 to 1.17. The Oatmans were dull, but there was a better inquiry for Arizona Ray at slightly stronger quotations.

Oil issues, with the exception of General Petroleum, had a tendency to soften. Union opened at 129.00 and declined gradually to 128.62½ at the close. Initial sales were registered in Associated at 66.00, but at the end of the meeting transactions were being made at 65.87½. As the result of an announcement that dividends would shortly be started on the common stock of the General Petroleum, the quotation for that security jumped to 87.00, a gain of five points overnight. The entire oil list has shown marked strength of late and, considering the present conditions in the petroleum industry, such stocks as Union and General Petroleum offer exceedingly good opportunities for an enhancement in values.

OFFICIAL TEST FOR TENDER CEDAR.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONG BEACH, June 2.—Tuesday, June 12, is the date set for the official government test of the lighthouse tender Cedar, built at a cost of $250,000 at the plant of the California Shipbuilding Company.

Among the government representatives who will witness the official trial will be E. C. Gillette of the lighthouse department at Washington, D. C.; W. C. Divrell of Ketchikan, Alaska, and H. C. Rhodes of San Francisco, both of whom are connected with the lighthouse service department.

Following its official test the Cedar will leave for Alaskan waters, where she will ply between the distantly-separated lighthouse stations on the bleak northern coast.

RETIRED RANCHER DIES OF INJURIES.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONG BEACH, June 2.—Injuries received by John Palmer yesterday in a traffic accident at Broadway and Pine proved fatal. He died early this morning at Tenth street and Linden avenue.

Mr. Palmer was knocked down as he was crossing Pine avenue, by an automobile, driven by Mrs. J. B. Roberts of the Alberta apartments. He suffered a broken leg, collarbone and two ribs, a badly wrenched back and punctured lung.

The jury at the inquest over the body today returned a verdict of death from a crushed chest, as a result of an unavoidable accident.

Mr. Palmer, a retired rancher, was 77 years old and resided at No. 770 Walnut avenue. He was native of England and had lived in Long Beach for the past four years. He leaves a wife and four sons.

COVINA CITIZENS SHOW PATRIOTISM.

GENEROUSLY SUPPORT WORK OF THE RED CROSS.

Prosperous Valley also Arranges for a Banquet to Men Who Sign the Registration Cards—Number is Expected to Reach Two Hundred—Vaudeville Benefit.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

COVINA, June 2.—Anticipating the registration of over 200 young men between the ages of 21 and 31, under the universal military service act Tuesday, this valley is aroused to a patriotic fervor.

With the whole valley prosperous from one of the largest crops of winter oranges ever marketed in one year, which has brought better prices than in any years in the history of the industry locally, the citizens are pouring money into the hands of Red Cross workers, giving generously to the support of Y.M.C.A. work among soldiers in the field, and at present are arranging for an all-day celebration and evening banquet for every man whose name is signed to a registration card next Tuesday.

Eight hundred people filled every available seat night before last at the High School auditorium, when Mrs. Pierre Leachworth, Mrs. John Hately and others gave a Red Cross vaudeville benefit. The programme included readings by Prof. H. J. Stonier of the Junior College at Azusa; whistling solos by Miss Edyth Lacey of Los Angeles, assisted at the piano by Alec Anderson; cartoon drawings of valley citizens by C. E. Groninger of San Dimas; Hawaiian music by the Mercer-Graham vaudeville artists of Los Angeles; country rube sketch by Violet Tucker and Lester Sieb of Covina, assisted at the piano by Donald Warner; Spanish and Egyptian dances by Miss Helen Van Pelt of Los Angeles, with Mrs. D. Yesterday afternoon an al fresco Red Cross benefit was given on the lawns of the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Nye of Rowland avenue, in honor of their son, Wilbur Nye, who leaves next week in the ambulance corps that goes to Allentown, Pa., and thence to France. Madame Ellen Beach Yaw, California's famous concert singer, gave several gloriously patriotic numbers, and the speakers included S. J. McConnell, chaplain of the Spanish War veterans, and John Clarke of the Seventh California Infantry. Several organizations of women in the valley participated.

MASQUE OF ITALY'S TRIUMPH IS UNIQUE.

Representing days of Italy's supreme triumph in art, the Masque of Dead Florentines, with text by Maurice Hewlett and music by Ernest Kroeger, the noted composer of St. Louis, presented at the Woman's Club of Hollywood recently, proved one of the most unique and beautiful affairs at any club this year. The cast included all the famous characters of the golden era of the Renaissance. Part first opened with the invocation to Dante, while part second dealt with love and Italy and art. Famous poets, painters, sculptors, historical figures, statesmen like Dante, Savonarola, Petrarch, Leonardo da Vinci, Fra Lippo Lippi, Lorenzo de Medici, Benvenuto Cellini, Michaelangelo, Sandro Botticelli, Niccolo Macchiavelli were represented by members of the club. The burden of Florence and her destiny and doom were summed up at the close of the masque, with the final invocation to Michaelangelo. The music which Mr. Kroeger has composed for the masque is full of the spirit of romance and classic beauty that pervade the whole.

FARMERS MAKE A CROP CENSUS.

Will Give Report for Entire Salt River Valley.

Agricultural Products Sell at Amazing Prices.

Must Submit Minimum Wage Bill at Election.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) June 1.—A general crop census will be reported within a few days for the entire Salt River Valley, gathered by the farmers of the various sections, following plans laid at a score of school-house meetings. Though the hay crop is on and cotton is being thinned, there is less trouble than expected from a scarcity of labor. A number of school boys have gone into the fields and the usual influx of harvest hands, at about 50 cents a day wage above last year's scale, helps to keep the crop moving. There is complaint over alleged extortionate rental asked by farmers for land, based upon $15 an acre paid by cotton leasers.

Agricultural products are selling at prices never before known. The new crop of hay is bringing, at the cars, $16 for alfalfa and $1 to $2 more for grain hay; barley, now being threshed, is quoted at $2.50, just twice what it brought this time last year; wheat, just commencing to come in, brings from $3 to $3.50; oats are about the same as barley; milo maize seed, much in demand for a summer crop, brings 5 cents a pound. Pasture-fed steers are in demand at more than 10 cents a pound on foot. One steer, fattened in the Arlington district, sold for $157.08, believed the largest price ever paid in Arizona for range stock. The animal weighed 1540 pounds.

On call from the State Council of Defense, 100 women have formed an auxiliary organization. The first meeting, held in the State Capitol, was presided over by Mrs. Edith C. Salisbury of the State university staff, with Mrs. J. L. B. Alexander of Phoenix as secretary.

PETITION IS CAUSE.

The minimum wage bill passed by the Legislature will have to be submitted at the election of November, 1918, this decided by the filing of petitions with about 3000 names. A score or more of protests have been received by the Secretary of State from persons who allege they signed the referendum petition through misrepresentation. The bill, one of the first introduced in the legislative session, called for $12 a week for women. It passed in the last hours of the session with a $10 limit, with no provision for apprentices. Sponsored by Mrs. Representative McKay of Bisbee, a strong laborite, the bill nevertheless had only mild support from the unions, from which came expression of a belief that the only proper way to raise wages was through union organization of the women sought to be benefited.

Dr. J. Bernard Nelson, a practicing physician at Mesa, a candidate at the last Republican primary for nomination as member of Congress, has been appointed Superintendent of Public Health and Registrar of Vital Statistics. He succeeds Dr. R. N. Looney of Prescott, whose resignation has been filed with the Governor. The new incumbent has been a line captain in the Arizona National Guard regiment, as well as attached to the regiment's medical staff.

FOR LIBERTY LOAN.

The Arizona State organization of Knights of Columbus has arranged for a collective subscription within the order to the Liberty Loan bonds. The matter now is being taken up in all subordinate lodges, but the gross subscription will be through the head of the Arizona organization, Asst. Atty.-Gen. R. W. Kramer of Phoenix. The local lodge of Elks has made investment in a large Liberty Loan bond and has remitted the dues of all members who are called to the colors.

Allen B. Brown, son of Supt. Brown of the Phoenix Indian Industrial School, has gone to France as a Red Cross ambulance driver.

MANHATTAN WANTS NUISANCE ABATED.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

MANHATTAN BEACH, June 2.—The Board of Trustees yesterday passed the following resolution requesting "abatement of the nuisance at Hyperion, caused by the dumping of raw sewage in the ocean."

Whereas, the present sewage conditions at Hyperion are most obnoxious to passengers traveling on the electric railway line by way of Playa Del Rey to this beach, and said conditions are a possible danger to the health of this community, and are detrimental to property values of this entire district; and

Whereas, the city of Los Angeles has called a bond election for the purpose of abating present unsanitary and dangerous sewage conditions at Hyperion and it is the sense of this Board of Trustees that it recommend favorable action on said bond issue to the City Council and people of Los Angeles, owing to the conditions above set forth;

Now, therefore, be it resolved that the City Council of Los Angeles and all Los Angeles papers be requested and urged to do everything possible to carry the $1,750,000 bond issue for work of improving sewage conditions at Hyperion, which bond issue will be voted on at the coming election as the present conditions at Hyperion are a menace to the health and prosperity of the Santa Monica Bay district and should be abated.

WOMEN TO SEEK FARM LABORERS.

UNIQUE PLAN IS FORMING TO RELIEVE SHORTAGE.

Consists of a House-to-house Canvass in All Larger Cities of State to Ascertain Names and Qualifications of Those Open to Emergency Work.

California women may assume the responsibility for solving California's labor-shortage problem, as a result of a meeting of the State Council of Defense held at Southern California headquarters in this city yesterday.

A house-to-house canvass throughout the State in all cities of over 10,000 population is planned with a view to ascertaining the names and qualifications of all persons willing to meet emergency employment on the farms and in the orchards. The idea is that this emergency service will release many thousands of men trained for heavy work on farms.

The suggestion that the women conduct this survey came from Dean Hunt, head of the agricultural department of the University of California, who says there will be a strong demand for workers, and that unusual steps must be taken at once to meet conditions from July 15 to September 15. The necessity, however, will continue throughout the war.

After Dean Hunt's address the State Council of Defense, by formal resolution, requested the Women's committee of the Councils of National and State Defense, to undertake the work.

The meeting was in charge of former United States Senator Flint. Members of the State Council of Defense present included: Atty.-Gen. Webb, Dr. John R. Haynes, Edward A. Dickinson, Mrs. Shelley Tolhurst, Mrs. Herbert A. Cable and Seth Brown.

TWO DROWNED WHEN BARGE TURNS OVER.

FOUR MORE NARROWLY ESCAPE A SIMILAR FATE.

Vessel Supplying Dredge in the Alamo Channel is Overloaded and Capsizes—Cargo of Wood Falls upon Men—Boy Killed While Playing Soldier.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CALEXICO, June 2.—Two men were drowned and four others narrowly escaped death today when a wood barge supplying the dredge Baker capsized in the Alamo Channel. The drowned men are P. Martinez and Jesus Perez. Although immediate efforts were made to recover the bodies, they had not been found late tonight. Tomorrow, in all probability, they will be taken out of the channel at the Cudahy check.

Because of the difficulty in procuring fuel oil in that part of the channel, wood is burned in the dredge. Two barges, manned by Mexicans, were carrying the wood from a camp near Hanlon's Heading, down stream to the Delta, which is removing silt from the channel. The Mexicans loaded their barge too heavily. It listed and finally turned over, throwing the crew of six into the water, according to Manager Paris of the irrigation district. The cargo of wood fell upon Martinez and Perez as they were precipitated into the water. Their companions successfully reached the shore, but the two men never reappeared on the surface. As the scene of the drowning was at some distance from the dredge, the crew of the Baker did not learn of the double drowning until half an hour after it occurred, when the survivors related the incident.

BOY IS KILLED.

Robert Lindrum, a colored boy, 9 years old, while playing soldier with playmates, was shot and killed by Lewis Collins, 10 years old, also colored, who pointed a 22-caliber rifle at him and fired. The bullet entered the right lung. Coroner Peterson was called from El Centro and held an inquest. Collins was exonerated, the verdict being "accidental shooting."

Romance.

BRIDE IS WON BY ICE-CREAM CONE.

BROTHER FIGHTS BROTHER AS GIRL CHANGES MIND.

Champion Sausage Cook of Russian Colony is Betrothed to Miss, When Kinsman's Proffer of Tidbit Captivates Her—One Goes to Jail, Other to Altar.

A burned sausage and a luscious ice-cream cone had so great an effect in the life of the Koslof brothers, Olaf and Ivan, that Olaf is now in the County Jail and Ivan is married.

The Koslof brothers are proprietors of a street wagon where delicacies dear to the palate of the Russian are sold. Sausage is the piece de resistance. And Olaf makes it better than Ivan. Therefore when the colony recently had a celebration, they crowned Olaf the king of the sausage vat, and appropriately wrapped around his head a wreath of fine fat sausages.

Bertha Marovitch appeared at the festivities. As the two most conspicuous guests, Olaf and Bertha were introduced. Later in the evening they danced together one of those aggressive and acrobatic Russian dances, and made a hit. Then Olaf "saw" Bertha home. Afterwards they met as often as Olaf could arrange such a delight, which was quite often. Next thing Ivan heard, his brother was going to marry Bertha Marovitch. He had not met her, but he was delighted, and began preparing for the good liquor he was going to buy for the wedding jubilee.

The wedding was to have been today, and all Gless street was excited. Bertha Marovitch's father is an earnest laborer and makes "good" wages. He was going to "throw" a spread for his daughter's great adventure.

But Bertha had never eaten one of her plighted husband's good sausages. Olaf repeatedly urged her to, but she was busy and did not visit the street wagon. So she was to call Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock and eat the most delicious sausage ever made and cooked in California, the climax of Olaf's work as a manufacturer and chef of the sausage.

Olaf, as the minute hand of the clock was almost nicking the hour, remembered he wanted a relish for Bertha. So he darted across the street, and left the precious sausage in the care of Ivan.

A girl appeared near the wagon and looked gaily within. Ivan looked gaily without. They both laughed. For two minutes the girl stood, then she turned and walked down the street.

Forgotten was the sausage, the wagon, all. Ivan followed. Two blocks and he overtook her. They flirted, talked and finally moved to a stand where Ivan bought two ice cream cones. They munched them. Ivan talked unwisely but well.

Then he explained he had an important errand, arranged a meeting and raced back to the stand. There was Olaf, shouting weird Russian curses. He pointed to the sausage, that dear, precious, romantic sausage. Another was on the fire.

Soon the Lorelei returned. Olaf introduced her to Ivan as his bride-to-be. Ivan and Bertha blushed. But Olaf was entirely too excited to be a good chef. He burned the sausage. Then he gave it to Bertha. The soft delights of the ice cream cone were still beguiling her palate. She took one hearty nibble at the sausage, felt the sear of the too-hot fire and spat it out.

"Nasty!" she said. "I'd rather have an ice-cream cone."

She looked at Ivan. He put on his hat and coat and away they went. Olaf let eight sausages burn to cinders before he took action. But when he started he went—after Ivan and Bertha.

He overtook them, chatting, then he got drunk. Later he returned and attacked his brother. It was a terrible fight. He was arrested. Yesterday he was taken into the Justice court for arraignment. As he passed through the corridor, a merry party overwhelmed him. They were coming out of Justice Summerfield's court.

Then Olaf fought again, compounding his crime. He jumped upon Ivan and beat him. Finally the guards dragged him away. Ivan was still smiling, and excusing his brother's anger. For he was Bertha Marovitch's husband.

How has Mrs. Lindsey Served?

The following is an open letter addressed to Miss Cora Foy:

Your appeal to "Women of Los Angeles" came to me this morning and I have read both it and the speech of Estelle Lawton Lindsey sent with it. I, and the other women of my household, helped elect Miss Lindsey to the City Council. She really was elected by the women of Los Angeles, irrespective of political faith—a compliment of sincere womanhood.

I admire you much for many things, but I resent your saying "by her acts we must all be judged." If that be true we have a right to call her to account, and we shall do it. How has she rewarded us? Ever since she came into the Council—and before—we, the women of Los Angeles, both individually and by clubs, have sought the elimination of billboards from our well-loved city. First, we advised, as a matter of civic pride. Then, as we saw them growing, we urged; then, as they still grew, we protested, begged and besought, and the billboards have only grown in size and number. In common gratitude for our confidence, shown by our votes, she should have stood for us with all her might and mind, from the very outset, in this thing that was our right and "the greatest good for the greatest number." She says in her speech, in the Council chamber, against the newspapers, "I will serve the people who elected me, and I will not serve the would-be bosses of the people."

Oh, no, she has not served us, and if we, the women of Los Angeles, ever get the billboards eliminated it will be because the newspapers have come to our help; and if Mrs. Lindsey is re-elected it will be by the votes of the billboard owners; her billboard friends in the Council, who love to extol their own virtues; men who display on the billboards for the benefit of our young people directions to resorts that will not be tolerated inside the city; her personal friends; and not the thousands of women who voted for her before.

She says she "is going to break the power of the press in this city or make it clean." I thank God for the power of the press in this city. It has done more to ferret out graft, inefficiency and rottenness than any other agency. If Mrs. Lindsey is going to make every newspaper clean she has a life job before her for every hour of her time, and should be released at once from further duty in the City Council, that she may begin her work.

The Jitneys' Poor Service.

LOS ANGELES, May 31.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I have resided in several cities in the United States and in all of these cities the people were always complaining about the street railway service, about overcrowding, unheated cars, inadequate transfer service, not starting early enough in the morning and not running late enough at night, etc. Now, while this is the only kind of service the jitney renders, I have yet to read the first complaint in a newspaper. If a corporation rendered the kind of service the jitney does, there would be a howl of rage from the people such as was never heard before in a free country.

The usual jitney is overcrowded if it carries more than three passengers and there are not even straps furnished to hang on. The passengers sit in cramped positions, and in one another's laps and hang on the outside in a way that would be impossible on a street car. But perhaps that is one reason why people patronize them—for the sake of promiscuous hugging and a general mixup, especially at night.

Now, I am not an employee of the street railway, nor am I in any way connected with it. In fact, I do not take enough interest in the matter to vote on it. I am merely a student of human nature, and it amuses me.

Substitute for Jars.

UPLAND, June 2.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Since tin cans and jars are high in price, I wish to add my "bit." Five years ago in September I was canning peaches. Having used all my jars and having more of the hot peaches left, I poured them into a clean Crisco can, putting on the cover tight and intending to use them in a few days.

Then I was called suddenly to New York and did not return until the following spring. In cleaning my pantry I found the forgotten can and opened it expecting to find the contents spoiled. Instead, to my surprise they were delicious.

I now prefer the Crisco cans to glass, as all that is needed is to press down the lid tight, without the use of any kind of sealing wax. I now use Cottolene pails and Karo cans, all sizes of Crisco cans, and any kind that has the same sort of cover, if they do not leak.

All should be washed in soapy water, scalded and sunned for a few days.

For the Chiropractors.

LOS ANGELES, May 31.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I would like to say a word in favor of the initiative petition being circulated by the chiropractors. The object of the petition is to allow the placing on the ballot of the proposition to empower the Governor appoint a State board of chiropractic examiners. At present the chiropractors are practicing without regulation. The proposed law would require each chiropractor to attend a chiropractic school 2400 hours and take a written examination before the State board of chiropractic examiners. This would protect the public from the correspondence course chiropractors.

The State Medical Board does not understand chiropractic and does not believe in chiropractic, therefore that board is incompetent to have jurisdiction over the chiropractors. The dentists have a separate board, and so do the pharmacists, the optometrists and the veterinarians, though there is more resemblance between them and the medical doctors than there is between the chiropractors and the medical doctors.

The chiropractors are willing to be examined, but they do not want to be examined by their professional competitors. Oregon, Kansas, Nebraska, Arkansas and North Dakota now have chiropractic examining boards.

Tax Keepers of Pets!

REDONDO BEACH, May 31.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I note in the "Pen Points by the Staff" a paragraph about the excise tax on sugar, coffee, tea and cocoa and the lack of the old-fashioned kick against taxing the "poor man's breakfast."

I presume there would be a great howl from the owners of that semi-useless, food-consuming animal, the dog, were they taxed for that useless luxury and nuisance in proportion to their size, weight, worthlessness and worth and their night-disturbing, marauding qualities. There is supposed to be a tax on dogs, but it must be very light and very lightly exacted.

We should tax more heavily the owners of food-devouring dogs and those who keep and feed useless pet cats. We should go for these owners of canine and feline families and thereby ease the burdens of the owners of human families.

JAMES FARNELL.

The Farmer's Side of It.

LOS ANGELES, May 31.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In regard to the shortage of help and to treatment accorded hired men on farms:

My husband, before our marriage, worked out by the month. So we try now to respect the men we hire (who are many at times.) But nine out of ten do not know how to appreciate kindness and respect.

Instead of letting them sleep in the barn or outdoors, we have provided a good, warm, comfortable bunk-house, with beds in it. I am sorry to say that when the men are called in to meals they eat like cattle. There are some exceptions, of course, but usually their food is all over the table, down on their chairs and often on the floor. They eat with their knives and then put them into the butter. They do not wait to have things passed to them, but reach across the table, often tippling things over. They do the chores around the barn and then come in to their meals without cleaning their feet.

If the laboring men who hire out would improve their manners they would undoubtedly receive better treatment. They come here sometimes half-starved and it takes a week or two to fill them up. Then they quit and start on the tramp again. Let them meet the farmer half-way and they will get better treatment.

BIBLICAL PLAY IS STAGED IN OPEN.

FINE WORK BY STUDENTS OF HUNTINGTON HALL.

Dedication of Novel Outdoor Italian Theater is Featured by Remarkable Clever Effort on Part of Talent and a Wealth of Realistic Settings.

With the sun-kissed Sierras back of Pasadena to bestow just the right setting, the staging of the Bible play, "Joseph and His Brethren," at Huntington Hall yesterday by thirty-five pupils of the school, was said by members of the Drama League present to be the most realistic, spectacular and beautiful play ever staged here by amateurs.

The occasion was the dedication of the open-air Italian theater at Huntington Hall, the only one in America. It is an exact copy of a sixteenth-century outdoor theater in Italy. The first scene was in Canaan and revealed Jacob's tent and the wells of Dothan. A herd of goats and tiny kids added much to the pastoral effect. From Canaan the scene drifted to Egypt and to Potiphar's house and into the court of Pharaoh.

The girls acted their parts exceedingly well and the production was almost devoid of amateurish efforts. The costuming, which was rich and costly, was brought to this country from the Holy Land by a Turk, from whom it was purchased. Many antique pieces of brass and earthenware were used in the production of the play.

More than 600 persons, including professionals, as well as parents and friends of the students, were there and, resting upon the greenish stone Italian seats, gave quite an air of smartness to the affair.

The performance was under the direction of Miss Helen Wilson, who took the leading role of Joseph. Miss Virginia Wallace played the role of Asenath, Joseph's wife. Miss Beatrice Stiles portrayed the part of Potiphar, while Miss Kathleen Doerr was Potiphar's wife. Miss Celeste Lamb played the role of Jacob and Miss Anita Smith was Pharaoh.

BOHEMIAN DINNER GIVEN.

Red Star Animal Relief Adds to Fund for War Work.

The local chapter of the Red Star Animal Relief, of which Anita Baldwin is the founder, gave a Bohemian dinner at La Taverna Espanola, No. 823 West Eighth street, last evening to raise funds for the society's work in the war.

Richard Walton Tully, author of the "Bird of Paradise," contributed to the entertainment. L. E. Behymer told of the organization's work in succoring wounded horses on the field of battle. Miss Julienne Berri danced several dances in costume.

It is planned to make these dinners monthly affairs.

The Silver Fleece—

MOHAIR GROWING IN THE SAN FERNANDO.

EXHIBIT OF OPERATION COVERING SIXTEEN MONTHS.

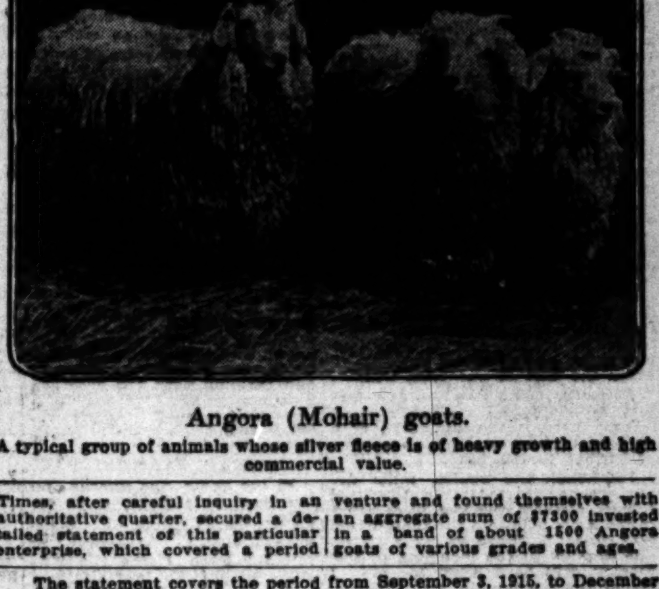
Detailed Statement of the Original Investment and of Additional Purchases of Stock, Cost of Operations, Expenses, Losses, Etc.—A Notable Result.

Having heard much about this exceptional industry as conducted near Los Angeles, a representative of The Times, after careful inquiry in an authoritative quarter, secured a detailed statement of this particular enterprise, which covered a period of sixteen months in Angora goat breeding and mohair-production in the San Fernando Valley.

The Rancho of the Silver Fleece is situated in the wooded foothills on the south side of the State Highway, west of the Encino Rancho, and occupies hill lands formerly owned by the Suburban Homes Company, later controlled by the Foothill Estates Syndicate, and later still bought by the present owner.

The statement covers original investments, additional purchases of stock at different times, miscellaneous expenses, and certain unusual losses, etc.

The business began when three associates (not one of them born goat men) joined together in the venture and found themselves with an aggregate sum of $7300 invested in a band of about 1500 Angora goats of various grades and ages.



Angora (Mohair) goats.

A typical group of animals whose silver fleece is of heavy growth and high commercial value.

The statement covers the period from September 3, 1915, to December 31, 1916—sixteen months. At the date first named one of the parties bought out his partners.

He thus started with an investment, all told, of		$ 7,300.00
Next he bought a band at Mentone of 419 wethers; cost, with freight and expenses		933.00
A little later he bought in Arizona a band of 299 high-grade ewes; cost, freight and expenses		1,999.55
Following this, within a few weeks, he purchased in Montana from Penwell & Sons, heavy live stock operators in that quarter, a band of 129 selected, pure-bred, registered Angoras, consisting of bucks, does and kids; cost, freight and expenses		1,790.95

NOTES AND EXPLANATIONS.

Some avoidable losses, above usual and natural losses, occurred during the campaign, not properly due to the business itself. Had these losses not occurred, the total income would have been materially more to the good; in fact, nearly $1400.

The output of kids for 1917 numbers about 700, valued in round numbers at $2000. The fertilizer accumulated in five months approximates $200 a month in value, or a total of $1000, and the mohair accumulated since last shearing is valued at $1400.

All the sales of mohair were made through the National Mohair Growers' Association, of which U. S. Grant of Oregon is president, F. Landrum of Laguna, Tex., is secretary and Brown & Adams of Boston are selling agents.

The foregoing exhibit is not, however, intended as an advertisement for any of the persons or land companies named, who know nothing of this publication. The showing is given purely upon the merits.

It is not known by even some live-stock growers that the Angora goat is in the first instance by nature, instinct and appetite a browsing instead of a grazing animal; hence his special adaptability to hilly, mountainous and wooded ranges, where oak and other brush is in evidence and even noxious weeds are abundant. Poisonous growths have no terrors for this hardy animal. He cannot, however, subsist altogether on sand and rocks as some unreasonable persons seem to expect, and at the same time be required to grow upon his patient back a heavy fleece of 75-cent mohair. There is a limit to his powers.

The fat does and wethers and the tender kids make rare eating, while the mothers are abundant milkers.

The milch goats are another breed of cattle and possess distinct merits of their own. The does are simply walking hospitals.

SALMON RUN LARGE.

"Yes" on No. 3.

ANNEXATION OF NEAR-BY COAST DISTRICT URGED.

THE City and County Consolidation Commission is urging all voters to vote "Yes" on the question of absorbing the West Coast annexation district proposition No. 3, on the ballot on Tuesday.

This district comprises more than 7000 acres of level land adjoining the city on the southwest and extending to the Pacific Ocean at Hyperion, just south of Venice. The section already has voted to come into the city and it is now necessary for Los Angeles to approve the annexation.

At Hyperion, Los Angeles city owns one mile of ocean frontage, all of which is included in this annexation district, and it is along this frontage that the city's outfall sewer empties into the ocean. It is considered necessary that the city secure governmental jurisdiction over this stretch, otherwise the frontage might be annexed to one of the small towns adjacent thereto, to the great embarrassment of the city in the discharge of its sewage.

If the West Coast annexation district is annexed to Los Angeles it assumes its full share of all aqueduct, harbor and power bonds, and will be a fine market for a large amount of aqueduct water, the commission sets out, adding that this annexation will be an important step towards city and county consolidation.

The following resolution was approved by the Board of Public Service Commissioners on last Tuesday:

"Be it resolved, by the Board of Public Service Commissioners of the city of Los Angeles, that it heartily approves of the proposed annexation of territory to the city known as the West Coast Annexation, to be voted on at the election of June 5. This district will furnish the city a close-in market for nearly 1000 inches of aqueduct water, and on that account alone, the annexation of the district will be of great advantage to the city. The board, therefore, urges the support of such annexation by the voters of the city.

MILITARY DRILL PROVES ITS WORTH.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SOUTH PASADENA, June 2.—That military drill for civilians, whether they be students or no, is immensely valuable, has been decisively proven at South Pasadena High School, where over 95 per cent. of the school's male enrollment has been taking drill for a period of three months.

Military discipline has been applied to the frequent fire drills of the school. Commissioned and noncommissioned officers of the military companies direct the students in the efficient manner of the drill ground. As a result, the time needed to empty the school buildings on an alarm of fire has been cut nearly a minute, a period of time which would mean a great deal in a case of actual danger. Full credit is given the military work for its aid in bringing this result.

WHITTIER COACH WINS A BRIDE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WHITTIER, June 2.—Whittier friends were surprised today to learn of the marriage last evening of Miss Mildred Martin and Prof. John H. Wilson of the high school faculty. Mr. Wilson has been a teacher here for six years, coming from Alhambra. He is best known throughout the State as the coach of Whittier High's champion basketball teams for a number of seasons. The wedding last night was a quiet home affair, celebrated at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Martin, No. 615 North Greenleaf avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson will reside in Whittier.

"TEMPTING" FACTORIES: THE SANTA ANA IDEA.

Plan of Aiding Industries to Become Established in Small Cities Meets with Success as Applied in this Enterprising Community—Business Men Say it is Effective, Safe and Economical.

BY VICTOR W. KILLICK.

A CRYING need of Southern California is factories. The big city and the small town both want them. The factory promoter locates where he secures the best inducements that may be had to encourage his particular industry. Most factory enterprises, heretofore, have located in metropolitan communities because in such places plenty of laborers are always available and railroad shipping facilities are to be had.

But at this time the rapid development of some of the smaller towns has created conditions almost, if not, equal in their inducements to industrial enterprise to those of the metropolitan centers. For certain types of factories, it is said, the inducements of the smaller towns are superior to those of the big cities.

Especially is this true of the smaller cities and towns of Southern California. Take railroad facilities as an example. There are approximately twenty cities and towns ranging in population from 2000 to 15,000 lying between Los Angeles and San Diego on the main transcontinental lines of two or more railroads and many of these are additionally provided with branch or local lines as well.

Recent adjustments in freight rates by the State Railroad Commission have removed practically all objections in the matter of transportation costs from these locations.

In the matter of labor conditions the small town is usually freer from strikes and labor discords than the big town, and this is considered a big economical factor by many employers.

Other advantages to factories located in the small town are cheaper factory sites, due to the fact that smaller population does not justify as high land values. The small-town factory generally finds freedom in operating, the local civic authorities imposing fewer restrictions on them than must of necessity be imposed upon a concern operating in a city of highly-congested population.

INDUCEMENTS OFFERED.

Due to the equality of the advantages afforded factories by so many of the Southern California smaller cities, something in the nature of competition exists among them in their efforts to bring factories to their communities.

So much is industrial enterprise appreciated in these towns that various plans to "tempt" prospective manufacturing plants into their midst with special inducements of monetary worth have been devised.

Three general plans have been followed in this regard.

First, that of the real estate principle, where a tract of land for a factory site is donated the manufacturer with the idea in view that the establishment of the factory plant will at once enhance land values in the immediate surrounding territory and bring in buyers to compensate the land owner fully for the property donated.

Second, that based upon buying stock in the manufacturing concern itself to get it started, with the idea in view that the new establishment will create better business activity in the community at once, and with the hope that the stock so purchased may eventually pay dividends and increase in value.

Third, that based upon giving the incoming concern a cash bonus to encourage it, where the concern spends the bonus under conditions imposed by the donors.

These three plans, or variations of them, are the general principles employed by the cities throughout Southern California to stimulate industrial enterprise.

Each plan has been worked successfully in various localities, but all of them at times cost the communities practicing them heavy losses. The main reason for such losses is that unscrupulous manufacturing concerns having little or no financial backing occasionally break into a community's confidence, take advantage of the liberality and then fail to make good.

Out of these several conditions has been born the "Santa Ana idea" of encouraging industrial activity. The plan of the Santa Ana merchants is declared to be already a practical, working success. It affords substantial aid to a young, substantial factory, while at the same time it protects the city from imposition.

The bottom of the "Santa Ana idea" rests upon the bonus system of inducement. But it is original in its peculiar organization and, being worked out very successfully at Santa Ana, stands as a model plan worthy the imitation of other communities.

AN INDUSTRIAL FUND.

The town merchants, members of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association and Chamber of Commerce have incorporated an industrial fund of $100,000, which is subscribed by the business men themselves and to be expended by donation to incoming factories applying for its aid.

The amount of money donated to any one concern is equal to 5 per cent. of its employees' pay roll for the first five consecutive years of its operation.

For example, a concern which will expend $100,000 in paying its employees for the first five years is entitled, under the conditions of the Santa Ana industrial fund, to a donation of $5000 at the time it commences building.

This donation has to be used in a certain prescribed manner, such as in the purchasing of a factory site or in the erection of buildings, decided mutually by the directors of the fund and the incoming factory. The title to this property remains in the industrial fund until the expiration of the five-year period, after which it automatically passes over to the factory, provided the factory has expended the amount in employees' salaries stipulated.

RAISING THE FUND.

The industrial fund is designed so as not to burden the merchants or business men. It is stipulated by contract with the subscriber that not more than 10 per cent. of his subscription shall be called for at any one time, nor more than 20 per cent. thereof within any one year.

Should the directors require more than 10 per cent. of the subscribed amount they may levy at some other time during the year a second 10 per cent. assessment or a fraction thereof, but that is the limit for that year. Twenty dollars is the most a merchant would have to pay toward the fund in any one year. He has five years to pay the entire amount of his subscription as a minimum time limit, but should the directors not find it necessary to levy an assessment during that time he will have nothing to pay.

BIRTH OF THE IDEA.

The idea of the industrial fund was given birth in Santa Ana by James S. Smart, a leading wholesale groceryman. The child of his brain was first conceived some years ago in Saginaw, Mich., where it was adopted and successfully carried out.

Mr. Smart has added to the present plan all the advantages gained by his experience in the application of it at Saginaw. The industrial fund idea comes to Santa Ana, therefore, with the branded "guarantee" to work and its adoption there has already proved this guarantee without flaw.

The vital cog in the operation of the industrial fund is its investigating machine.

It was at this point in the invention of the Santa Ana idea of helping factories that James Metzgar, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce and of the Merchants' Association, injected some of his experience.

The city of Santa Ana is a strong believer in commercial organization and always has been, and Mr. Metzgar has for a number of years been secretary to both its principal business organizations.

In his official capacity Mr. Metzgar has become conversant with all sorts of industrial schemes that have presented themselves to the door of Santa Ana.

Mr. Metzgar is the first line of defense in the operative end of Santa Ana's Industrial Fund.

It would be difficult in the opinion of Santa Ana business men for a bluff or sham to pass the secretary and here 90 per cent. of the unsound propositions presenting themselves to sip the elixir of the Industrial Fund are downed.

OTHER BARRIERS.

But should some clever stranger ensnare the confidence of Mr. Metzgar he would only find his victory a small one. On the recommendation of the secretary he must confront the five members of the Manufactures and Industry Committee made up of Santa Ana's picked business men especially qualified to make a thorough investigation into the financial status of strangers. These men also determine the applicant's industrial ability and experience and should flaws be exposed at this, the second line of defense, the proposition gets no further.

The Committee of Manufactures and Industry, after finding the prospective enterprise has sound merit, recommends the proposition to the consideration of nine directors of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce. These men decide whether the city desires the particular class of industry proposed and study the effects such an industry might have upon the pioneer concerns already in operation in the town. These directors also consider the chances that the new concern has for its survival and will not recommend even a financially stable concern which has a doubtful chance for existence.

When the directors of the Chamber of Commerce complete their survey of the proposed industrial concern they may kill it then and there if it is faulty, or recommend it to the final tribunal, which is composed of the seven directors of the Industrial Fund.

Here, the commercial chieftains of Santa Ana, including Mr. Smart, consider its application for financial assistance and determine the amount to donate and the manner in which it shall be expended.

Only then is the "acid test" of inquiry completed and if the proposition has passed through these four fires of investigation and comes out unmelted, the Santa Ana merchants will have little to regret in backing the concern with their money and good will.

FINAL PROTECTION.

And the element of protection to the subscribers of the Industrial Fund goes even further. Although the directors of the fund authorize the immediate expenditure of a donation to the new factory, the amount of which 5 per cent. of its anticipated pay roll for the first five consecutive years, the title to the property purchased with the donation does not go to the new concern until the expiration of the five-year year term. Thus, if a factory fails to pay out in salaries to its employees the amount necessary, the Industrial Fund subscribers still retain their money's worth in property and the option of doing with it what they desire.

That the Industrial Fund has past the stage of theory in its evolution at Santa Ana is evidenced in the $60,000 plant of the Mission Wool Mills now nearing completion in the town and which is the first manufacturing concern to secure its aid.

A large and substantial factory building and a moderate-sized warehouse located on a four-acre plat of ground are already erected and the installation of machinery has advanced so far that the manager of the concern expects to have the plant in operation soon.

When running at full capacity the mills will use sixty skilled workmen, many of whom will be brought to Santa Ana from other places on account of their special qualifications. This is new population.

The Mission Wool Mills Company will expend about $150,000 in salaries to its employees during the first five years of its operation and was aided to an amount of 5 per cent. of this, or $7500, by the Industrial Fund, which sum is already invested in its new plant.

The management of the new factory is highly pleased with the prospect of securing title to this substantial bonus, even though they have to wait five years before the title automatically passes to them.

"The Santa Ana industrial fund was the best inducement we found in any city of Southern California," said one of the officials of the company. "It is strictly a ground business proposition of mutual benefit to factory and town alike. There is no red tape about it, and every step in its organization is a necessary one. We appreciate the aid Santa Ana has afforded us, and will in our turn strive to maintain the confidence the Santa Ana people have put in us, and give the town at all times the best of our good will."

As to the effect that the new factory is having on the town merchants, here is the statement of a Santa Ana furniture man, who is a subscriber to the fund:

"Although the woolen mills are not even completed or in operation I have already received back every cent I have paid into the fund. From now on all increase to my business, due directly to the incoming of this factory, will be a profit to me. I think this scheme the best business boost Santa Ana ever had."

In commenting on the fund the man who fostered it in Santa Ana, Mr. Smart, stated: "We are highly satisfied with the venture, and I think the plan is going to meet with favor. We have something tangible and definite to offer any new factory. We put up our money. The new factory can secure that money without difficulty if it meets our conditions. These conditions they can know beforehand and save themselves the time of making an application if they know they cannot meet the requirements we impose."

Mr. Metzgar says he has received requests for information on the organization of the fund from several other cities.

At the present time Santa Ana is desirous of securing a shirt factory, a cotton factory and a sweater and mattress factory.

NEW RAMONA ACRES.

The Janss Investment Company reports sales at New Ramona Acres as follows: To Harry F. Rose, four-room bungalow, $2400; to Mr. and Mrs. Kistler, two large lots, $2100; two acres to Catherine Grant, $1500; large lot to H. J. Trimmer, $1300; acre to C. E. Barker, $1350; acre to L. Dewey, $1650, and half-acre to F. D. Libbey, $1400.

RANCH ON MARKET.

Large Ventura County Tract to be Sold in Small Parcels.

The Tapo ranch, a mile north of the Santa Susana station of the Southern Pacific coast line and formerly a part of the Spanish grant known as the Rancho Simi, is now being placed upon the market in small parcels by the firm of Martin & Martin of this city. The ranch, which was purchased about fifteen years ago by the Patterson Ranch Company, has until recently been handled by that corporation as an investment proposition. It is understood that the decision to subdivide and sell the property was made following the death of one of the company's heaviest stockholders a year ago.

Much of the land offered for sale is planted to lemons, oranges, apricots and walnuts. The water system is owned by a mutual company, water stock being included in the purchase price of the land. The distributing and storage system is stated to be new and modern. The ranch is a mile from the Los Angeles-Ventura boulevard that runs over Santa Susana Pass. It is supplied with electricity for both light and power, and has its own spur line from the Southern Pacific.

PLAN FINE FLATS.

Dr. A. G. Schloesser reports having sold to Taylor Bros., contractors and builders, two lots at the southwest corner of Franklin and Argyle avenues, in Hollywood. The purchasers have finished plans and let contracts for a large flat building to be erected on the site. The building, it is stated, will cost in the neighborhood of $40,000.

For Santa Ana's progress. Mr. Metzgar is secretary of the Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' Association. Mr. Smart is the originator of the industrial fund plan. The woolen mill was erected as a direct result of the bonus given by merchants. The Spurgeon building is four stories high and cost $135,000. The avocado tree and bean field are typical of the diversity of production in the Santa Ana district. There the beet fields are extensive and highly productive.

Invitation to Prospective Farmers Carries with it Excellent Opportunities in General Farming Lands Surrounding the City—Intensification of Tilling is Keynote of Present Developments.

BY VICTOR W. KILLICK.

THE people who live in Santa Ana are not afraid of food shortage. If a hostile force were to build a ring around Orange county and declare an embargo on all imports and exports of foodstuffs the inhabitants who live in "the biggest little county of the West" would merely work the harder at their farms and would produce not only all the food necessary for their own consumption but a surplus as well to be on the safe side.

In the center of this highly-productive little county is its county seat, Santa Ana, the business metropolis of the county, a bustling young city of 15,000 people, clean, new, modern, well provided with fine retail stores, well connected by excellent railroad facilities, affording all that could be desired in school accommodations, living conveniences and teaming with the enterprise of a population surcharged with "push" and the go-ahead qualities of true, peace-loving, patriotic American citizens.

WHERE FARMING PAYS.

In the Santa Ana district farming has been an undoubted success for years. A casual visitor has but to take a trip through the district to be convinced. Beautiful, clean-foliaged trees clothe the land on every hand. Verdant alfalfa fields, broad beet and bean fields, truck gardens and crops of every variety from the frost-loving apple to the semi-tropic avocado flourish there.

It is this wide variety of produce that gives the farmer so much latitude of action. He cannot get the same privileges in every other place. Should he find the caring for an alfalfa field, for example, a difficulty, he can convert this same field into a walnut grove, a truck garden, a fruit orchard without doing anything freakish. All of these crops grow in the district and there is a market established for them and the farmer is not experimenting to raise them.

Among the leading crops are oranges, lemons, walnuts, sugar bets, beans, apricots, peaches, olives, berries. Besides these there is an extensive dairying industry and a poultry industry. Large quantities of grain and alfalfa are produced. There are two big sugar factories to consume the local beets, creameries to buy the local cream, oil factories to take the local olives, canneries to consume the local deciduous fruits.

WATER CONDITIONS.

Well water is available in all localities of the Santa Ana district. In the regions south and southwest of the town well shafts penetrate artesian water strata at from 300 to 600 feet and water flows above the surface in large quantities. A ten-inch well two miles southwest of Santa Ana, sunk 800 feet, flows continuously 150 miners' inches (approximately nine gallons to the miner's inch) throughout all seasons of the year. The top of this well is provided with a twenty-eight-inch stand pipe, ten feet high and the natural pressure of the water carries it to an overflow. Some 50,000 acres in the county, including much of the territory in the Santa Ana district are irrigated by gravity water and over 110,000 acres of grain, beet and bean lands produce their annual crops with the aid of the normal rainfall exclusively.

The Santa Ana City Waterworks derives its supply from eight artesian wells having an average depth of 800 feet each. The plant has a value of $225,000 and distributes its water through thirty miles of pipe system to 4100 consumers at the rate of $1 per 1000 cubic feet consumed. Storage reservoirs connected with the plant have a capacity for nearly 6,000,000 gallons. A pressure of seventy-five pounds per square inch is maintained at all normal times. This can be doubled in case of fire. There are 250 fire hydrants in the city. The manager states that about 2000 more people could be accommodated by the present water system in addition to the existing population of the town but that an indefinite increase of population could be provided for by the erection of extra equipment.

The city of Santa Ana is the hub of the good roads of Orange county. Santa Ana has spokes of good roads radiating to all the leading coast towns and beach resorts to the south and southwest and to all the famous oilfields, orange towns and mountain resorts in the northern and eastern portions. The State highway between Los Angeles and San Diego passes through Santa Ana, the distance from Los Angeles being thirty-five miles and from San Diego ninety-two miles.

The general construction of the Orange county roads is a four to six inch concrete base, surfaced with asphalt macadam. Good roads exist practically between every city and town in the county. Santa Ana is said to have more automobiles, per capita, than any other city of equal population in the West.

SANTA ANA.

Santa Ana is a typical home town, a cosy city of inviting residences, well cared for and artistic. It is also a business city and one of the liveliest in the Southwest in this respect. Its six banks hold over $6,000,000 on deposit and have resources nearing the $9,000,000 mark. It was incorporated in 1886. It has three railroads, the Santa Fe, Southern Pacific and Pacific Electric. It has also one of the best high school plants in Southern California and a junior college with a total enrollment of 886 students. Every public convenience such as parks, library, fire department, police protection are well maintained. A newly developing industrial section, including the fruit packing houses, ice and cold storage plants, canneries, planing mills, lumber mills, woolen mills, laundries, brick yards, garages and machine shops, furnish a factor of business independence to Santa Ana as a reinforcement to its farm industries.

Santa Ana has numerous churches and fraternal orders. There is an active Chamber of Commerce, anxious and willing to aid strangers to become informed on the district. There is a merchants' association and other business bodies.

Land values in the district, at this time, are commensurate with the general development of the territory.

Good alfalfa lands in areas of twenty acres and larger are to be had from $200 per acre up according to improvements and location. Planted alfalfa lands producing income crops sell from $300 to $500 per acre. The readiness with which well water may be obtained makes alfalfa raising an especially profitable crop. Particularly is this true when the grower consumes his own output by running a dairy in connection.

Sugar-beet and bean land may be had in tracts of from twenty acres up at from $200 to $500.

In the southwestern portions of the district are large areas of black peat lands suitable for celery culture. This may be purchased at from $600 to $700 in almost any sized tracts.

Good, frost-protected, citrus lands or lands suitable for planting to avocados, may be had in the raw state with available water at from $350 to $500 per acre. When planted in young citrus trees the prices run from $500 to $1300 per acre. Most of this land lies in a belt along the foothills northeast of Santa Ana, having excellent soil and being considerably elevated above the surrounding territory.

City residence lots of standard size bring from $300 to $5000 each depending principally upon location. Business lots range from $100 to $300 per front foot.

PROSPECTIVE ENTERPRISES.

As a direct issue of the war the United States government has taken renewed interest in the prospective plan of developing Newport Harbor which lies south of Santa Ana.

Running into Newport Bay is a long arm, or lagoon which extends inland to within five miles of Santa Ana. This lagoon is so low as to be affected by the tidal fluctuations and presents a practical dredging proposition as a feature in the development of Newport Harbor.

At an expenditure of approximately $2,000,000, according to the calculations of engineers, the government could there locate the most concealed submarine base in the world.

The government has already made some inquiry into the project and still has it under advisement. The city of Newport recently voted bonds in the sum of $100,000 to build a jetty at the entrance to the bay and on the expenditure of this amount Orange county will appropriate a similar sum for a second jetty.

Already the War Department has negotiated for the purchase of a considerable tract of land having a frontage on the bay.

Another feature in connection with the development of Newport Harbor is the fact that a valuable mine of cement rock has been discovered in the mountains back of Santa Ana. A twenty-five-mile railroad, built on a grade not to exceed 4 per cent. and possible to average less than 1 per cent., has been considered by engineers, and a feasible route suggested. This railroad would deposit the cement rock to seaboard at the proposed Newport Harbor very cheaply.

The development of Newport Harbor is an economic necessity to the Pacific Coast. Business men believe it is bound to be undertaken in the course of time, as the coastwise shipping exceeds the present accommodations for it. When that time arrives a big commercial impetus will be given to Santa Ana.

These conditions promise much for the establishment of much industrial enterprise at Santa Ana. Factories are needed. Those establishing themselves at this time within the district will benefit greatly by all such improvements as might come in connection with harbor development.

Orange county stands pledged to assist to the limit of its ability any practical movement toward the opening of Newport Harbor.

FACT AND COMMENT.

...real estate business in California has been put on the same ...ional plane as law and medicine as the result of the signing by ...Stephens of the realty license ...passed by the State Senate ...Assembly. Beginning June ...all persons dealing in real ...handling leases or making ...on a commission basis will ...compelled to take out licenses ...put up bonds. After that date ...brokers found doing business without a license will be subject to penalties similar to those ...upon doctors practicing outside the law. Licensed realty ...found guilty of fraudulent ...after the law goes into effect will have their licenses taken ...from them.

...Los Angeles Realty Board ...labored for years to have such ...placed upon the statute ... Much of the credit for the ...of the bill is due to W. W. ...who during the three years ...his presidency of the board ...indefatigably for the measure. ...Valley Roads.

The people of Antelope Valley are ...of all the support the ...can reasonably give them in ...efforts to secure good roads. ...they are showing in un...to start needed highways ...when county co-operation ...financial way is impossible ...not only for admiration, but ...of substantial assistance ...earliest moment when con...will warrant. The coun...authorities, of course, cannot ...binding future officials, but they can go on record as favoring and urging county aid for needed road work on the other side of the mountains and thereby pave the way for action when the time comes for another apportionment of highway funds.

The Antelope Valley land owners have obtained expert advice in the planning of a road system designed to serve the greatest possible number of agriculturists and horticulturists in their part of the county at a minimum of expenditure. The highways they seek to build are, without exception, practical utility routes planned for the purpose of facilitating the movement of crops and the development of the valley's resources. Scenic roads and automobile speedways for tourists are the least of their worries. They want and need 100 miles of hard highway that will stand the wear and tear of heavy trucking and it is to this end that they are working.

The part of Antelope Valley lying within the limits of Los Angeles county has a present population of only about 4000, but the valley people, according to all indications, are not going to allow this fact to discourage them from voting bonds to cover the cost of at least half the needed mileage of good roads. Their plan is to build fifty miles of highway, costing approximately $400,000, and to pay for it out of their own pockets. The mileage constructed will serve the most immediate and pressing needs of their huge district. They ask the county to do the rest during the next three years, its total appropriation to equal the sum expended by the valley itself and to be made in three equal annual instalments.

Good Investment.

It seems a fair bargain all around. Antelope Valley has made wonderful strides in the last few years and has become a heavy buyer of products of all kinds manufactured and handled in Los Angeles. Its oppor-

Unfolding agricultural domain, all parts of which will soon be linked by paved highways with Los Angeles.

The transportation handicap under which most of Antelope Valley now labors is strikingly illustrated by the photograph at the upper left showing crops being hauled by four-horse teams through deep sand and dust to shipping points. The valley people propose to bond themselves to build some fifty miles of paved trunk line highways similar to that already completed by the county between Palmdale and Lancaster and are asking the county to construct an equal mileage to round out the system thus started.

FINE HIGHWAY SYSTEM FOR ANTELOPE VALLEY.

Land Owners in Northern Part of County to Vote Bonds for Urgently-needed Good Roads—Will Ask Supervisors for Aid in Finishing Work—Plans Now Shaping.

A HUNDRED miles of good roads will be added to the 750 miles or more of paved county highways already built by the county, State and various road districts in Los Angeles county if plans now being matured by the people of Antelope Valley for needed traffic arteries in their section are carried out. All present indications, too, are that a considerable portion, at least, of the contemplated new highways work in the unfolding agricultural and horticultural domain on the other side of the mountains will be under way before the end of the present year.

Antelope Valley tried for many years to obtain official recognition from the county of its good roads needs before meeting with much success. The history of the district up to a comparatively recent day, in fact, was not calculated to inspire confidence in its worthiness to share in the county appropriations. Antelope Valley, excepting for certain favored but isolated spots in the foothills, was more or less of a failure as an agricultural region until men with capital and initiative came along and solved the water question by introducing the modern high-power gas engine pump. Conditions in the valley have completely changed in the last decade, but old-time prejudices have been slow in disappearing.

Antelope Valley succeeded three years ago in getting the highway it needed most of all for its development, namely, the Mint Canyon route that is now nearing completion. Acting apparently on the theory that they had better ask for "enough" while they were at it, some of the land owners of the valley formulated and tried to put through a road programme for their district that would have cost the taxpayers of the county over $2,000,000 for highways serving the An-

BIG DEAL ON RECORD.

Eight Hundred Thousand Dollar Exchange Closed—Four Downtown Holdings and Suburban Acreage Change Hands.

One of the largest realty exchanges closed in recent years in Los Angeles, a deal involving more than $800,000, went on record last Tuesday. The deal, the final papers in which were passed last Monday and the exclusive announcement of which was published in The Times the day after, involved the transfer of four separate downtown Los Angeles holdings and a large suburban acreage, and was closed through the joint agencies of W. W. Mines & Co. and A. W. Gowan. It was unique in that it was of the nature of a three-cornered trade.

In the transaction, all the details of which were handled in a single escrow, the Blanchard Hall Building on Broadway between Second and Third streets, and a four-story wholesale building at Nos. 237 to 241 South Los Angeles street, were transferred by the Harris Newmark Company to C. Q. Stanton. In exchange Mr. Stanton transferred to the Harris Newmark Company the Western Electric Company Building at Eighth and Santee, valued at $275,000, and 160 acres of land at Cypress and Sunnyside avenues, near Inglewood, valued at $104,000. A difference of $75,000 in favor of Mr. Stanton is understood to have been paid in cash.

While the negotiations for the trades mentioned were under way arrangements were made for the disposal by the Harris Newmark Company of the Inglewood land. The acreage was accepted by Dan Murphy and T. A. Riordan in exchange for forty feet of frontage on the west side of Olive street two lots north of the Knickerbocker Building.

The Blanchard Hall building is a five-story structure extending from Broadway through to Hill, with a frontage of sixty feet on each street. It is understood to be paying 6 per cent. net on a valuation of $300,000. The Los Angeles street building is 62 by 190 feet in size and is said to have changed hands at a valuation of $100,000. The Western Electric Building is a six-story reinforced concrete structure covering a ground area of 100x124 feet and was traded at a given valuation of $275,000.

WILL PLANT BEANS.

The sale of ten acres of land in the Fruitland Acres tract in the San Fernando Valley to Howard Lemon is reported by the Janss Investment Company. The consideration is given at $5000. It is understood that the purchaser will at once plant the tract to beans. Other sales in the same subdivision are reported by the Janss company as follows: Five acres to F. W. Johnson, $2000; five acres improved with a young walnut orchard, to Mrs. Mary Miller, $2500, and five acres of apricots to Mrs. L. Deitweiler, $2500.

BUNGALOW SOLD.

The McCarthy Company reports the sale of a five-room bungalow in its Florence-avenue Heights tract to George Brodus for a consideration of $3350. The lot is 40x140 feet in size and is near Vermont avenue.

FOR SALE—COLONIAL RESIDENCE.
Just completed, pure type Colonial, interior lines, decorations, etc., in perfect harmony with architecture. Owner cannot occupy and will sell. Location superb, commanding view of entire city, including big downtown buildings, Hollywood section and mountains from Old Baldy to the sea. Walking distance 2 of best institutions of learning in Los Angeles, new Marlborough and new L. A. High. Block and half from Wilshire Blvd. and Windsor Square; highest class residence section of the new subdivision, block from street car. More homes of better class have been erected within 2 blocks in the past 6 months than any other similar size territory in city. Splendidly constructed by day labor, from bottom to top and guaranteed to stand most critical inspection. Not the cheap, shoddy kind often built for sale only. Large lot, 62 feet front, set to lawn, both front and rear, and high-class shrubbery. All wires in underground conduits. Automatic water sprinkling system. Every room, with one exception, leading to balcony or terrace, with French glass doors. All walls and terraces laid in Colonial red brick, herringbone style, on 4 inches concrete. Handsome, 2-story garage for two cars and complete living-rooms above. Large, light basement. Beautiful, colonial paneled, center hall, decorated in gold, ivory and mahogany, with winding stairway to third story. Dining-room paneled to ceiling and decorated in silver, with silver candelabra to match. Living-room 16x31, finished in gold and ivory with marble, sculptured mantel and candelabra to match. Fine conservatory connected, and terraces on 3 sides. Library and breakfast rooms, both very large and handsomely finished. Butler's pantry, kitchen and private stairway leading from center hall. Five bedrooms and 3 baths on second floor, including maid's apartment. Shower baths and base tubs. All rooms finely finished and decorated, with indirect lighting fixtures to match. Large room on third floor, 15x40, nicely finished, for dancing and billiards. Situated 838 Lorraine Blvd., across from Windsor Square. Price $17,500. May consider some trade. Regular commission. THEY MADE A MISTAKE.

A wealthy elderly couple bought a South Harvard Blvd. corner, 65x150, in the Wilshire district. They bought in January of this year. The house is white plastered, with 12 rooms, 5 bedrooms, 3 baths and fine garage.

They spent over $15,000 in furnishing, etc., with Indian Rugs and rare furniture. The walls are all canvassed and hand decorated.

The grounds are beautiful. They found out they cannot live here and will sacrifice everything to be relieved of this property.

ONE OF THE MOST PERFECTLY BUILT AND CONVENIENTLY ARRANGED HOUSES IN ALL LOS ANGELES. 13 LARGE ROOMS.

East-front lot, 75x180. This place was built by the owner for his own house by day labor, and he never thought of selling it until recently. Consequently, no expense was spared. The ARCHITECTURE is exceptionally pleasing to the eye and thoroughly individual. The exterior is of white plaster, which has been treated with three liberal coats of lead and oil. The whole lower floor is of PIANO FINISH, the living-room and library in GENUINE TOBASCO MAHOGANY, and the dining-room in OLD ENGLISH OAK; large reception hall in OLD IVORY, with handsome stairway and large landing; living-room to the left, with magnificent BATCHELDER tile mantel; library is in back of the living-room; dining-room to the right of hall in front. The PIANO finish on the woodwork in these rooms is beyond compare; all the decorations were done by the most exclusive decorating house in Los Angeles. Large sun parlor off library and breakfast-room. Pass pantry, kitchen and screen porch unsurpassed in beauty and equipment. Maid's room and bath off screen porch. Exceptionally large and beautiful bedrooms, solarium and sleeping porch upstairs. Two wonderful tiled baths of latest design, including shower and sitz bath. Two-story garage to accommodate two cars, with billiard-room and chauffeur's quarters (room and bath) above. BOWSER gasoline filling station. Also separate Jap house. The landscaping includes rose garden, rare shrubs, trees and flowers.

See it, and you will find that the above is but a meager description of this PERFECT HOME. SHOWN BY APPOINTMENT ONLY UPON APPLICATION TO THE UNDERSIGNED. Considering the quality, IT IS INDEED A BARGAIN AT THE PRICE QUOTED. J. B. ALTHOUSE, 603 Story Bldg. F4175; Bdwy. 4245.

Venice and Ocean Park.

FOR SALE—HERE'S A HOME FOR THE FAMILY WITH A NERVOUS MOTHER.

Did you ever experiment with our beach AIR as a treatment for the nerves?

One of our lady customers who purchased a home here two years ago was in our office yesterday afternoon; she says that she was a nervous wreck when she moved down here, but you should see her now; she is a picture of perfect health.

She told us that she never goes to Los Angeles unless she can return the same day, not caring to remain away from the beach air over night, because she notices a decided change in her feelings.

HUNDREDS of other women living in the Santa Monica Bay section will tell you the same story.

Buy the home advertised below, try living here for the same length of time and if the claim made above proves untrue in your own experience, we will agree to sell it again for you without charge.

This home is situated on a high corner on Third street, Ocean Park, where you get the good sea air, three blocks from the edge of the surf, commanding an unsurpassed view of the mountains and the sea.

8-room well built house; large living-room with handsome fireplace, paneled dining-room with spacious windows for air and the morning sun, the kitchen is complete with all the built-in features, large screened rear porch with built-in refrigerator, 4 bedrooms, 2 of them opening onto porches, large bathroom, cement basement with laundry; the house has one of those large, delightful sun rooms fronting the ocean; garage, fine garden and fruit.

House is beautifully furnished, all ready to move into at once. Price $8500, very easy terms.

FOR SALE—

A $100,000
IMPERIAL VALLEY RANCH
FOR $75,000.

332 acres, fully water stocked—100 acres in a first-class stand of alfalfa, balance now seeded to milo maize. This is located five miles southeast of Imperial, the location being the best, and the soil as good as there is in the entire Imperial Valley.

There is a good brick house, barn, stanchion, two smaller houses, and, in fact, all the buildings that go to make up a modern ranch.

There are also 130 milk cows, about 100 milking, the remainder coming in fresh very shortly, 25 head of calves, 200 head of hogs, four horses and four mules, with harness, and a complete set of implements, including a scale, milk seperator, everything that is needed on a model, dairy, cattle and alfalfa ranch.

Price, as above stated, is $75,000, and this ranch would not now be on the market, except that unforeseen circumstances have arisen.

Seeing is believing, and we will be glad to make arrangements to show the ranch to you at any time. For further particulars call or write

STERN REALTY CO.,
602 Haas Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.
Phones: Main 3704. F3735.

FOR SALE—
MOVE RIGHT ON and get busy. YOU GET THE CROP, it's a good one, and will pay a great big profit for this year. The price is absurdly low, but the owner says SELL, and has made the price to sell.
80 ACRES, one mile from station, and one-half mile from State highway, 65 acres is the best deep rich sandy loam, the balance is good natural pasture, worth per acre just about the average acre price for the entire tract. There are 25 acres of good alfalfa, 30 acres in sugar beets, in fine condition, which promise a bumper crop, 8 acres heavy barley ready to cut for hay; when off the ground water will be turned on and planted to beans; two big crops for the season. There is a good family orchard, and shade trees, old, but comfortable 7-room house, horse barn, cow barn with room for 30 cows, chicken houses and yards; electric light, and power, electric separator; mower and rake, plows and other implements; everything is ready for action. There is an income right from the start. Sell the barley hay now, and the four, perhaps five, crops of alfalfa when ready. The sugar beets $60 to $100 per acre, are largely velvet, most of the expense is already paid. The price is $10,560, $5500 cash, balance about to suit at 6 per cent.
Of course you know Manteca is right in the heart of things, 13 miles south of Stockton, and 70 miles by State highway directly east of Oakland, that it is the office town of the South San Joaquin irrigation district, with the most efficient irrigation system in America, and that the Spreckels Sugar Company is building its $2,000,000 beet-sugar factory at Manteca. You know all this, but come and see for yourself. DO IT NOW.
W. J. WOODWARD,
Manteca, Cal.

A RARE CHANCE—

A perfect 20-acre ranch at $600 per acre, fully equipped, 14 miles from 5th and Spring sts., between Lankershim and Burbank, 30 minutes by auto.

Improvements could not be duplicated for $5000.

It is all cement piped for irrigation; has its own water, a beautiful 6-room bungalow, with bath-room, cement cellar, etc. Hog pens with running water to each pen. Big hay barn. All fenced, crossed fenced and hog tight. Chicken corrals, large cement reservoir. About 5 acres of fruit, balance has been in alfalfa.

An idea place to live and a snap for a man that will work it intelligently. Former owner had over 200 hogs on it, besides cows, etc.

R. A. ROWAN & CO.,
200 Title Insurance Bldg.
10444. Main 7096.

FOR SALE—THREE BIGGEST RANCH BARGAINS ever offered—

1500 acres, foothills near Puente, only 23 miles out, all Page wire fenced, several springs, fine grass, shade, feed, good house, barn, corrals, large cement troughs, several hundred acres fine walnut or orange land. About half can be put in grain, lot in this year; Santa Fe R. R. and other companies buying and leasing for oil all around. This will make an ideal grain and stock or dairy ranch worth $125 per acre, but can deliver for quick sale at $75.

500 acres right on boulevard between here and Pomona, all in cultivation, fine pumping plant, over 200 inches of water. Most of the place in sugar beets now, balance barley and oats. Income this year estimated by sugar company at $40,000. Adjacent lands held at $500 per acre, and worth it; several sales near at that price lately. Can deliver above for quick sale at $250 per acre.

ABOUT 550 acres adjoining above rolling, some level, all can be cultivated, lage house, barn, etc. Water can be developed for alfalfa at low lift. Fine general purpose ranch. Price only $150 per acre.
Have us show you the above at once. LESLIE B. BIGGINS CO., 501 Union Oil Bldg. A1455. Broadway 1458.

FOR SALE—
If you are looking for a real hog, alfalfa, dairying or stock ranch, it will pay you to investigate 350 acres in San Luis Rey Valley, in San Diego county, 20 miles from ocean, 5 miles from railroad, and State Highway. Good boulevard to Oceanside. Auto trucks call at door every morning at 7.30 for milk and cream. This property has 200 miner's inches of water, with a 14-foot lift. 180 acres hog-tight. Seven-room house, large barn, dairy barn, with 32 stanchions. Separator-house, hog pens; all buildings in excellent repair. Most modern and complete set of implements, 10 head of work stock, cows, hogs, chickens, all go with place. Price $37,500. Might take little trade, but under no circumstances all trade. The price on this land figures a little over $100 per acre. With such improvements, volume of water, and personal property, there are very few such ranches in Southern California. If you are a real farmer and know values, soil, and water conditions, this is your opportunity for picking up a bargain.

Famous Eaton ranch in the Owens Valley, containing 440 acres; 600 inches of water at practically no cost. Most modern poultry equipment in America, with capacity of 10,000 fowl. At present 8000 laying hens, all eggs sold in Nevada above Los Angeles market prices. Ranch on paying basis. Over $80,000 has been spent on improvements. Most modern equipment. Land planted to alfalfa, wheat, corn and clover. A cash buyer can get this ranch at a most unusual bargain price. This property is clear of incumbrance.

Underground concrete pipes, no open ditches. Every foot of land properly irrigated. A great abundance of water guaranteed.

IDEAL SOIL ELEMENTS—Fertile, mellow, soft, easy to work. No hardpan, no alkali, no adobe; rich in phosphorus, potash and nitrogen.

"HERE WE PLACE BEFORE YOU YOUR OPPORTUNITY TO BECOME AN INDEPENDENT TOMATO GROWER. YOUR PROFITS ON TOMATOES ALONE SHOULD PAY FOR THE LAND EASILY AND YOU SHOULD HAVE MONEY TO 'BANK' BESIDES."

This splendid bargain is located two hours from here in the Riverside fruit section, right close to concrete State highway, Pacific Electric and Southern Pacific stations, stores, schools, etc. Not far from a cannery.

Phone, write or call and make appointment at once to see this genuine snap. It won't last at this low figure and you will have to act quickly if you want to make money easily and promptly. GUY M. RUSH CO., 901 Story Bldg. Bdwy. 24. 60055.

FOR SALE—

SAN [illegible]NANDO VALLEY.
OPPORTUNITY.

By going in together there is a chance to get 3 40-acre tracts of the best land in San Fernando Valley, $100 per acre less than it is worth, with a crop of sugar beets that the rent is worth $25 to $30, which will be harvested in a few months, you can not make this land better if you had it made to order. All under irrigation, eight-inch steel mains, and lays in a location close to the best little town in the valley, and there has been sold in the last six months over $200,000 worth of these lands sold at $100 more per acre than you can buy this. This is gilt-edge, banks will loan nearly one-half on the price asked. Investigate at once. No agents, no trades, no phone calls, but come in and talk it over. This is right and spells profit to the first men that get in on this. Monday 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

IMPERIAL VALLEY—

FOR SALE—
The FARMER who settles in IMPERIAL VALLEY NOW will perform a PATRIOTIC SERVICE for the NATION—harvest the biggest yields of money crops at the HIGHEST PRICES since the Civil War—Profit by the INCREASE of property values that is as CERTAIN as sunrise.

We are offering IMPERIAL VALLEY FARM LANDS in parcels to suit purchasers. These lands comprise the most fertile soil in this State, and are adapted to any kind of farming; there is an abundance of water the year round, and any practical farmer can make the cost of his farm in a very short time.

If you contemplate purchasing a ranch don't fail to look these lands over, as this is the opportunity of a lifetime, and the prices and terms are such that one can readily pay for the land from the revenue derived from it.

The great advantage of farming in the Imperial Valley is the fact that one can raise two crops of grain each year, namely, barley and corn. By planting barley in the fall and harvesting the same early in the spring, and then planting to Milo maize or Kaffir corn, which is harvested in October and November.

We can truly and conscientiously say that the Imperial Valley is the most ideal country for raising alfalfa, cattle, hogs and poultry. Alfalfa yields from one to two tons to the acre per cutting, and seven to nine cuttings per year.

We also desire to call your attention to the growing of cotton, fruits and vegetables, and under this head we will state that the Imperial Valley has been first and foremost in placing on the market its marvelous and delicious cantaloupes, its fruits and green vegetables, which have been shipped in carload lots, and commanded the highest prices, owing to the fact that they reach the consumer from two to six weeks ahead of any other territory.

For further particulars and information call or address WALTER K. BOWKER, General Agent, 503 Bryson Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal. Phones: Main 9596, F4029, or
H. H. CLARK, General Manager, Imperial Valley Farm Lands Assn., Calipatria, Cal.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

There were very few berries in the market yesterday, although ample supplies are expected to be on hand in a day or so. At the moment strawberries are rather scarce, as the first crop has been wound up and the second crop is coming into the market but slowly. Blackberries are in strong demand with supplies short. There has seldom in past years been so good a demand for both blackberries and raspberries as there has been this season. Prices have remained about normal notwithstanding.

During the months of April and May there was exceptional animation in the prune market. Buying was not only general all over the United States, but as well in France and England. There was steady advances in prices and the tendency of values is till to mount. Eastern experts predict that 40s will eventually command from 15 to 18 cents. Shortage of supplies is such that even the predictions may be discounted unless the government intervenes to stop the advances. Most of the advances in prices took place before the completion of the California Prune and Apricot Association. It cannot be supposed that the perfection of that organization brought about the advances. The food situation is such that advances were bound to occur. All that the association can do is to maintain the prices that have been made. The outlook for the 1917 crop is favorable, but it is believed that it will run to small sizes. Owing to the high prices for spots, there has been a tendency to quote high prices for futures. But there is little doubt that the California Prune and Apricot Growers' Association will take the situation in hand and place futures on a reasonable basis to bring about continual and permanent improvement rather than encourage growers to take advantage of the food situation for speculative purposes.

There were no calls on the Produce Exchange yesterday, and in consequence quotations for the listed commodities remained the same as on Friday. Receipts consisted of 350 cases of eggs, 43,050 pounds of butter, 4140 pounds of cheese, 63 sacks of potatoes and 373 sacks of onions.

LANKERSHIM SALES.

Dealers Report Two San Fernando Valley Transfers During Week.

The Furcher Co. reports having sold to J. E. Carr for E. S. Butterworth, forty acres of uncleared land on Tenth street, just east of Lankershim boulevard, in Lankershim, together with thirty acres almost adjoining, owned by Martha J. Hunter. Mr. Carr, it is announced, will at once have the land cleared and planted to crops.

The company also reports the sale to Adolph Ott of forty acres of uncleared land at the corner of Pacoima and Eleventh streets in Lankershim for Peter and Henry Purrier, the consideration being given at $9000 cash. Mr. Ott, it is understood, will build and otherwise improve his holdings.

Cotton

MARKET SUFFERS SEVERE REACTION.

GENERAL LIST CLOSES STEADY AT A NET LOSS.

Sentiment Seems Unsettled Owing Partly to Renewed Nervousness Over Turn of Affairs in Russia—Bulk of Selling Is Attributed to Profit-taking.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, June 2.—The cotton market, which made record figures on Friday, following the publication of the government's first crop report of the season, sustained a severe reaction today, the general list closing steady at a net loss of 21 to 26 points.

The market opened at a decline of 5 to 10 points under realizing, but the offerings were very quickly subscribed and prices sold 16 to 22 points net higher right after the call on a continuation of Friday's buying movement. There also was southern selling accompanied by reports that spots were now on a tenderable basis, and sentiment late in the morning seemed to be rather unsettled owing partly to renewed nervousness over affairs in Russia. Prices broke about 38 to 45 points from the early high level and the close was at the lowest point of the day.

There was trade buying as well as a further broadening of Wall Street and western interests on the early advance. Reports from the goods trade indicated that Friday's developments had stiffened up an already strong situation, and the impression was that the trade was buying against forward requirements. On the other hand, the southern selling here was believed to be partly against actual, and the two features were about an offset. The extent and rapidity of recent advances naturally promoted reactionary sentiment. The week-end crop reviews, suggesting an improvement during the last few days, operated in the same direction, but, aside from southern hedging, the bulk of the selling was attributed to profit taking.

Profit-taking Occasioned by Usual Week-end Closing of Outstanding Contracts Accounts for Heaviness and Irregularity of Market—Unsettlement Begins with St. Paul and Spreads to Pacifics, Coalers and Trunk Lines.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, June 2.—Profit-taking occasioned by the usual week-end closing of outstanding contracts and next Tuesday's holiday probably accounted for the irregularity and heaviness of today's market. The short interest also derived some encouragement from the further decline in Russian exchange to a point approaching its minimum and the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission ordering a suspension of six months of scheduled domestic storage within the port of New York Harbor. Unsettlement began with St. Paul and spread to Pacifics, coalers and trunk lines. Motors were another element of weakness. United States Steel fell 1⅛ to 128⅜. Noteworthy exceptions were provided by the so-called Mexican group, Mexican Petroleum scoring an extreme gain of 5 points, other oils rising 1 to 2⅛ and American Smelting 2, with an average of a point for other coppers. Most of these gains were effaced in the heavy offerings of the last hour. Total sales amounted to 560,000 shares.

The bond market was irregular, with total sales par value aggregating $1,230,000.

United States and Panama bonds lost from ¼ to 1 per cent. on call during the week.

ORANGES.

LOS ANGELES, June 1.—Office of the Fruit World, Hollingsworth Building.) With the cleaning up of the miscellaneous varieties of oranges, shipments have fallen off and an exceptionally strong market situation has resulted on all varieties of oranges. Eastern jobbers report a very active demand for oranges and that the panicky feeling caused by the general economic unsettling of the past and predicted continued active demand for oranges throughout the balance of the season.

Crop statistics of the Bureau of Markets show that 94.2 per cent. of the strawberry crop of the State of New Jersey is harvested during the month of June; 63.8 per cent. of the Delaware crop; 55 per cent. of the Maryland crop; 36.4 per cent. of the Virginia crop, and 35 per cent. of the North Carolina crop. Strawberries have a considerable bearing on the orange situation, and June looms up as one of the heaviest shipping months in several States. Just what effect this will have on the Valencia situation is problematical, but should be kept in mind by shippers. Valencias are now beginning to move in considerable volume. There is an active inquiry from all markets and the situation looks better than it has at any time during the past few weeks. Cash brokers report some business being done on a basis of $2.25 to $2.60 for Valencias, the price depending on sizes and district. As the fruit runs heavy to 216s a larger a premium is paid over smaller fruit, of which there will be a heavy run this season. Crop estimates place this season's Valencia crop at close to 18,000 carloads, of which about 700 carloads will come from Tulare county, the balance from Southern California districts.

Shipments of oranges for the past week have totaled 1098 cars, as against 1201 cars the previous week. The total shipments from Southern California for the season now amount to 26,453 carloads of oranges, as against 21,515 cars to the corresponding date last season. From Central California the shipments of Valencias for the past week have totaled five cars, as against ten cars the previous week, the total to date this season being 4082 cars, as against 5280 cars to the corresponding date last season. The Northern California shipping districts have completed their season with a total of 845 cars of oranges shipped, as against 610 cars to the corresponding date last season. Orange shipments to date from the entire State total 31,380 cars, as against 27,405 cars to the corresponding date last season.

LEMONS.

LOS ANGELES, June 1.—Office of the Fruit World, Hollingsworth Building.) Notwithstanding the generally cold weather that has prevailed throughout a large portion of the western and middle western markets, a splendid demand has continued for lemons and the market has been very active, with best stock selling on a basis of about $4.

The situation as regards foreign lemons has been favorable to California, the supply being but 54 per cent. of the average of the past eight years. Advices during the past week have been received, however, of shipments of 65,000 boxes, which will alter the situation considerably and place the available supply at about normal.

FUTURE DELIVERIES OF WHEAT ADVANCE.

GRAIN PRICES EXPERIENCE AMAZING ADVANCE.

Attempts to Purchase Small Amounts on a Market Bare of Offerings Causes Extraordinary Jump, but Quotations Underwent a Subsequent Steep Drop.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, June 2.—Extraordinary advances in the price of future deliveries of wheat resulted today from attempts to purchase small amounts on a market bare of offerings. The extreme rise was 22 cents a bushel, but quotations underwent a subsequent steep drop and closed unsettled, with net gains of 8 to 9 cents, at 2.06 for July and 1.91 for September. Cash wheat—that is, wheat for immediate delivery—did not follow the advance in futures. Corn finished 1⅛ to 4¼ cents up, oats unchanged to ⅝ higher, and provisions varying from 7 cents decline to a rise of 20 cents.

It required actual buying of only 40,000 bushels to cause the jump in the price of September wheat.

One crop estimate suggested that the yield in North America this season would reach a total of fully 1,000,000,000 bushels, but import needs of Great Britain, France and Italy werep ut at 560,000,000 bushels.

One reason which made sellers wary of wheat was strength of corn. Oats sympathized with the ascent of corn andw heat.

Pork and ribs were bullishly influenced by the action of hogs and grain.

HOW CALIFORNIANS ARE MAKING MUCH OF THEIR VAST RESOURCES.

NEVER before in the history of California have the State's resources been made to count for so much as this year. Efficiency in town and on the farm are almost everywhere apparent. Owners of orchards are planting vegetables between the trees. Urban dwellers are planting or have planted back yards and vacant lots. Canneries and factory buildings are being built and others are being enlarged. But it is also apparent that there are many more opportunities that have not been taken advantage of. Fortunes have been made in many ways in California. There are others waiting for the alert investor who puts his time and money into a California opportunity.

San Luis Obispo.

TO SUBDIVIDE RANCH.

Two Thousand Acres to be Cut into Hundred-acre Parcels and Sold. Santa Maria Inn Open Again after Being Improved.

Civil Engineer John P. Black is at Suey ranch on the Santa Maria River, San Luis Obispo county, surveying about 2000 acres of the ranch west of Suey Creek, which will be subdivided into 100-acre tracts and sold to intending settlers. Suey ranch, which is owned by the Newhalls of San Francisco, contains about 40,000 acres.

After having undergone many improvements the Santa Maria Inn at Santa Maria has opened. Frank J. McCoy is proprietor and manager of the new establishment and he has selected Harry Hampshire for his assistant manager. Mr. McCoy was with the Union Sugar Company for several years.

Work has been started on improvements to be made in San Luis Obispo county by the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company. Approximately $15,000 will be spent.

The filling station recently completed by the Associated Oil Company at the intersection of Marsh and Higuera street, San Luis Obispo, is now open. The lot runs 200 feet on Higuera and 186 on Marsh. The station is of large size and is finished attractively and when illuminated at night makes a good impression. A new Federal truck equipped with a 500-gallon gasoline tank was also put into service by the company today.

Seventy-five carloads of live stock, going from San Luis Obispo county in two days of the past week, is said by local railway men to have broken all records for cattle shipments. The stock was shipped Thursday and Friday. The shipments Thursday were from Paso Robles, fifteen carloads being sent to Kansas City and five carloads to Victorville, near San Bernardino. Friday there were two other shipments from Paso Robles, totaling thirty cars. Four cars were consigned to San Francisco and twenty-six were shipped to Omaha. Charles Olgiati Friday shipped nine carloads from Santa Margarita to San Francisco and the Diamond Bar ranch shipped sixteen cars to Woodford, in the Tehachepi Mountains.

Pomona.

INDUSTRY GROWS.

Food Conditions Increase Canning Operations—Planting Between Rows, Farmers Will Grow About a Thousand Tons of Tomatoes.

Pomona in two years has developed a $10,000 industry out of the demand that the war has created for foodstuffs. Canning factory managers say that between 750 and 1000 tons of tomatoes will be grown and packed there this summer. These will be paid for at the rate of $10 per ton.

Two years ago no tomatoes were grown for canning. Last year about 200 tons were grown on contract for one cannery, at $8 per ton. This year that cannery has contracted for 375 tons and another cannery has contracted for 350 tons and will take as much more tonnage as it can secure.

The important feature of this industry is that it has developed on waste land to a great extent. The farmers are growing tomatoes between their rows of young fruit trees.

It is estimated that ten tons of tomatoes per acre will probably be the average production this year. With 1000 acres of more or less waste land under cultivation the growers are pretty certain to raise $10,000 worth of tomatoes. The demand is almost unlimited.

The canners will buy all the tomatoes they can get, because they have more orders than they expect to be able to fill. It appears that the ranchers south, southwest and northwest from here have developed their tomato industry without neglecting any other branch of farm work. The young plants have been set out this month and are now waiting for warm, sunny days to develop them.

Brawley.

HOG FEED YARDS.

Seven Acres Utilized to Provide Badly Needed Facilities for Raisers—Cannery to Take Care of Surplus Vegetables.

Seven acres of ground near the Southern Pacific tracks at Brawley are being used in the construction of hog feed yards, an institution badly needed by the hog raisers of the valley. It is being financed by R. N. Miller, and will accommodate 1000 hogs.

The new yards will be used by farmers while their stock is awaiting shipment. Hogs will be driven into the inclosure as they arrive from the ranches, and ground milo and tankage fed to them while cars are being assembled for the loading.

Another new industry for Brawley is the cannery, which is being erected by Peter P. Hovley, Richard Woelfel, Dewey Carey and Simon Carey. This cannery will take care of the surplus tomato, apricot, strawberry, squash and pea crop of the valley. The first building will be 24x80 feet, and modern canning machinery will be installed.

Oxnard.

ADDED CAPACITY.

Sugar Factory's Production Increased to Three Thousand Tons by Expenditure of Half-Million Dollars in Equipment.

Construction work at the American Beet Sugar Company factory at Oxnard is progressing rapidly, and the work will be completed before the start of the 1917 sugar campaign. When the improvements now under way are finished, more than $500,000 will have been expended since the close of the last sugar-making season, and the daily capacity of the mill will have been raised to 3000 tons. The new sugar warehouse, with a storage capacity of 240,000 bags of sugar, has been accepted, and work is now under way on the conveyor system, to convey the sacked sugar to the storage room, avoiding several handlings heretofore necessary. Men are now at work installing the presses in the Oliver filler press building, another new feature. The 1917 sugar-making campaign will start, says Acting Manager Rudolph Beck, sometime the latter part of July, depending largely on weather conditions.

Long Beach.

ANOTHER SHIP PLANT.

Syndicate Secures Option on Ten-acre Site and Arrange for Dredging to Provide Waterway. May Build Ocean-going Vessels.

A syndicate of eastern capitalists and Southern California business men, whose identity is being withheld at this time, has secured an option on ten acres of land owned by the Salt Lake Railroad, west of the Long Beach Harbor turning basin and north of the Southern California Edison's million-dollar power plant, for the establishment of another new shipbuilding plant.

Representatives of the syndicate have interviewed municipal officials with reference to dredging the basin to provide a waterway adjacent to the prospective site with a depth of twenty-five feet.

Not only have the agents for the shipbuilding company obtained an option on the ten acres, but they are ready to close negotiations for an option on additional acreage that they may hold the refusal to a site adequate for the accommodation of an extensive yard for the building of ocean-going vessels.

Shipments of the past two weeks of mining and drilling equipment to Middle Western States by the Star Drilling Machine Company, a Long Beach Harbor industry, have amounted to $20,000. Manager William H. McCoy stated last week that his company was about to close a contract that would bring the month's business up to the $50,000 mark. More than 200 heavy drilling machines manufactured by the Star Drilling Company of Long Beach were used by the United States government in dredging the Culebra Cut.

Bryn Mawr.

RAISE MORE HOGS.

Farmers on Big Ranches Prepare to Increase Their Droves and Expect to Get Good Returns This Year and Next.

Farmers in the Bryn Mawr section, near Redlands in the upper end of the San Bernardino Valley, are working to meet the government's appeal for a greater food production in the way of grains and other food products, but they are planning to give even more attention to the raising of hogs. They believe that the shortage in meat will be even more acute than any lack of other foodstuffs and as the district is ideal for the raising of hogs many of them are going into it on a large scale.

Some of them are working hog raising and dairying together with great success and it is said that the opportunity for other investors is greater than it has ever been. Food experts say that there is not the danger of a shortage the coming year that there will be in another year and for that reason the farmers are concentrating and getting lined up for the big drive next spring and summer. The price of pork makes it possible to realize a handsome return on the investment in the face of high cost of feed and of labor.

These farmers are not necessarily counting on the cost of meat ceasing, but are making their plans to come out ahead of the game even with a considerable drop. The droves of hogs on several of the big ranches are being increased as rapidly as possible and experts are being secured to give advice in the conditions that must be met. For this reason the farmers of the section are solidly behind the movement in this county to get a farm adviser for they say that such a man would be valuable to them at this time of all times.

The cattlemen of the San Bernardino Valley are also increasing their herds for they say that the shortage of beef is much more to be feared than shortage in foodstuffs. The grazing land at Big Bear Valley and other places will carry the limit this summer. The Brookings Lumber Company of Redlands, has opened several thousand acres in the mountains for grazing this year.

Calipatria.

GROWTH OF A TOWN.

Valley Three Years Old, Center of Rich Territory, Natural Result of Conditions—Business Lots at Original Price.

With the platting of Calipatria April 1, 1914, Imperial Valley people who had seen and taken part in the building and growth of other valley towns, acted on their judgment, and were the early buyers of Calipatria lots, and the builders of most of its business blocks and residence section.

The real factors in building Calipatria were the thousands of acres of fertile agricultural lands tributary to it and the ability and experience of its founders.

Added to the 100,000 acres of farm lands tributary to Calipatria its founders secured its commanding location within this territory by planning the building of branch railroad lines east and west, then south. The west branch, or Calipatria-Westmoreland Railroad, is now completed and in operation, and material for the east branch toward Holtville and Yuma is now assembled in the Calipatria yard.

The Southern Pacific Railroad records of shipments in and out of Calipatria show an increase of from 200 to 700 per cent. for the five months in this year as compared to the same months in last year. The number of cattle, sheep and hogs now being fed or grazed in the Calipatria territory has been relatively increased, as is also the production of hay, grain and all farm products.

With the increased acreage in production year by year, with the enormous increase in the cattle, hog and sheep industry, the continued growth of Calipatria seems certain.

Especially is this true of values on Main street, because Main street property is limited, being only four blocks long. That Main street lots are likely to advance in value is due to the limited or restricted area it covers, and because no other street in Calipatria can even take its place. No other street crosses the Southern Pacific Railroad right of way. No other street has restrictions permitting only high-class pressed brick business blocks. No other street extends due west for a mile and a half through the highly improved close-in ten-acre farms, and forms the main artery to supply and draw from the entire territory west.

No property on Main street has ever been resold at less than the original purchase price. Every resale has been at an advance of from $100 to $400.

Only the sale of Carl F. Schader's interest to his associates, the Imperial Valley Farm Lands' Association, makes it possible to secure now, lots on Main street at the opening or original prices, and this opportunity will only last until the 15th inst., after which time it is the purpose of the association to hold the remaining property at higher prices.

Imperial Valley.

NEW CROP A SUCCESS.

Help Crop This Year so Good That Next Year's Operations will be on Bigger Scale—Planting of Ramie to be Increased.

Efforts of the Timken Ranch Company to grow hemp on a large scale in the Imperial Valley seem crowned with success. Last week a contrivance invented by R. G. Sclichten, which is designed to eliminate the vegetable matter in the fiber, proved equal to the task assigned it at a test in El Centro. The crop will be cut in about two weeks.

The Timken ranch officials planted 100 acres to hemp, the seed being procured from Kentucky. Men who are familiar with hemp state that the growth of the plants exceeds anything they have ever seen. The hemp plants constitute a dense growth which is almost impossible to walk through and are from five to eight feet high. The Timken ranch is also raising ramie fiber, which is used in the manufacture of China silk. But ten acres are given to the raising of ramie, but the crop has been a great success, and the average will be increased next year.

Tulare County.

THREE CITY PROJECTS.

Porterville to Build New Bridges, Pave Thoroughfares and Add Another Fire Station. Magnesite Plant Being Added Too.

Three development projects are under way for Porterville and it is announced that it is the purpose of the City Council to carry them through this summer and fall. They are, construction of a system of new bridges over Porter slough to accomodate to accommodate increased traffic; paving of all approaches to the business district and connecting with paved thoroughfares the county highways to the city limits; addition of another fire station as a protection to the rapidly developing residence district being built up to the south of the business section. Plans for the work are being drafted by the City Engineer. Funds are to be secured with the proceeds of the sale of a special issue of bonds.

Additional equipment is being installed by the Porterville Magnesite Company which now has on its pay roll more than 300 men engaged in handling ore for eastern steel mills. A new central compressor plant is being installed, to be driven by a fifty-horse-power motor, and a large increase is being made in the private railroad lines over the brow of Magnesite Hill to connect the various leases. At the present time the Porterville company is marketing rock at the rate of 8000 tons per month.

T. E. Foster, the field representative of the California Associated Olive Growers, is at work in Lindsay securing property suitable for the erection there of a new olive packing plant to be built in time to handle the output of fruit for the coming season. Mr. Foster while here reported to members of the association on the pack for the season of 1916-17. The highest price paid for any of the product was that for giant manzanillos, the 16s bringing as high as $500 per ton.

The Northern Tulare County Citrus Association has purchased from Tout and Scruggs the latter's packing-house equipment at North Dinuba and will start work soon on a pack of eighteen cars of Valencia oranges. The first Valencias of the season went last Friday from the Elderwood district. Early reports of damage to the crop apparently have been exaggerated and it is estimated the total county production will be from 1200 to 1400 cars.

Material is being assembled at North Dinuba for the erection of a new packing-house which is to be conducted during the ensuing season by the Guggenheims. The structure will be 68-213 feet in size. A. Stouffer has been appointed manager.

Bond experts of San Francisco and Los Angeles have filed written opinions approving of the issue of $2,200,000 for the county highway system. Delivery of the first $1,000,000 of these bonds has been made to the First National Bank of Porterville. Funds are now available for construction on the first unit of the work, the main highway through the east side from Dinuba to Porterville.

Complete figures of the new acreage devoted to the production of food crops in the Porterville district show 2500 acres now in beans as against 270 acres last season.

Santa Barbara.

BUILDING ACTIVITY.

One Country Club Has New Home and Another is Planning to Build One—Half Million Dollars in Street Improvement.

Building activity continues to be a notable feature in Santa Barbara, one of the latest constructions being the new home of the Santa Barbara Country Club. The club has secured larger grounds, partly within the city limits. A fine golf links has been built, and now the palatial clubhouse is under way.

La Cumbre Golf and Country Club, which has bought grounds within the Hyde Park district, has also plans for a clubhouse, and will open bids for the construction Monday. Between the two clubs upward of $60,000 will be spent in improvements on the two properties.

The new home of Boyland, Prince Hopkins' unique junior school, is rapidly nearing completion, and the olive treating plant is practically completed, so far as the first of the proposed three units is concerned. These and many other large building improvements are giving evidence of Santa Barbara's steady and permanent growth.

More permanent street improvement has been completed or commenced in Santa Barbara during the past fiscal year than in any one year within the history of the municipality. It is estimated that the total cost of this improvment, completed, under way and shortly to begin, will total over the $500,000 mark.

FIFTY CARS OF PEAS.

Enormous Increase in Shipments of Early Vegetables from Rich Valley—Thousand Cars of Lettuce Next Year is Prediction.

Showing the great advance in the industry of raising early vegetables in the Imperial Valley, Tom Elliott of the Wells-Fargo Company, authority on this subject, has just compiled figures showing that 435 carloads of lettuce and fifty carloads of green peas were shipped from Brawley alone.

The business of raising peas on a commercial scale is but four years old in the valley. Last year there were but ten carloads sent out, chiefly to eastern centers, but six carloads going to the coast. John Nix led in the shipments, sending thirteen carloads. F. H. Speich raised ten cars, and Hunt, Hatch & Co. ten cars.

In 1916 the total lettuce output of the valley was but twenty-five carloads. It is the opinion of shippers that next year more than 1000 cars of the delicious yellow-head lettuce grown here will be shipped.

ORANGE GROVE SOLD.

H. V. Bright, capitalist and manufacturer of Cleveland, purchased last week twenty acres of Valencia oranges known as Valencia Park, at Rowland avenue and Lark Ellen street, Covina, one of the finest groves in the Covina Valley.

The consideration named is $40,000, or $2000 per acre. The grove is one that was set out by B. L. Reynolds, who built a fine residence of ten rooms on the property, and in other ways improved it.

The new owner is building a handsome residence on property which he owns above La Verne, where he has been in ranch partnership for some time with B. L. Reynolds and Harry Damerel of Covina.

SCHOOL BOND ISSUE.

The voters of Huntington Park will vote on a $78,000 grammar school bond issue next Monday. The buildings are planned. One for the Fifty-seventh-street site, one for the Miles-avenue site and an extension of the Malabar building at Malabar avenue and Zoe street. The accommodations are at present nine rooms behind the actual needs and this shortage will be increased when the fall term opens. A strenuous campaign is being made for the bonds by civic and commercial bodies.

Fact and Comment.

telope Valley alone. The plan was sandwiched into a $3,000,000 highway bond project, carefully programmed to win support as a whole from other specially-favored districts of the county. The scheme was predestined to failure.

The whole thing could not have been better planned, however, so far as the valley's interests were concerned. In asking for three separate paved highways to their district, the promoters of the defeated bond scheme had advertised most effectively the real needs and deserts of the valley. Public support was firmly enlisted for a serviceable route through Mint Canyon, and, when available county road funds were set aside for this purpose, there was little opposition from any quarter. Thus it came about that by making extravagant demands for scenic routes over the mountains that it did not need, the Antelope Valley made certain of the practical utility route to Los Angeles that it did need.

Having secured a direct outlet to Los Angeles over a paved traffic highway, the valley people were next confronted with the necessity of building trunk highways from different parts of their vast territory to connect with this all-important thoroughfare. The Mint Canyon highway itself runs northward through Palmdale to Lancaster, practically bisecting the part of the valley lying in Los Angeles county, and is soon to be carried by the State northward to the county line as part of the new State highway to the Owens River section. To get to it with their products, however, the farmers and horticulturists of the producing areas of the valley have been compelled to make long hauls over bad roads. With great areas being set out in orchard and farm all the time, the problem of transportation becomes constantly more serious.

PROPOSED PLAN.

The Antelope Valley people propose to meet the situation by building a series of east-and-west trunk routes intersecting the Mint Canyon highway at different points between the place where the highway emerges into the valley from the canyon and the northern county line. These new routes will tap existing roads all over the valley. When they are completed the farmers and orchardists instead of having to make hauls of as high as forty miles over badly-cut-up dirt roads to the Mint Canyon highway and the valley shipping points, Lancaster and Palmdale, will make for the nearest of the radiating trunk lines, which will in no case be more than a few miles away.

The Antelope Valley Chamber of Commerce, composed of representative land owners from all that part of the valley lying within Los Angeles county, is handling the new road programme. The organization is making a thorough canvass of the district affected and has found great enthusiasm for the project in all quarters.

Stirred to action by the need of serviceable highways over which to move the crops now bearing and the still greater volume of products that will be coming into bearing in from two to five years, the valley developers are letting no grass grow under their feet. The present condition of the county's finances offering no encouragement of immediate aid from the Supervisors, the valley commercial body is urging that the property owners of the district themselves undertake the construction of half the needed mileage of highways, counting upon the county to finish the work at a future and more propitious time.

It is proposed to call a special election in the valley at an early date for the purpose of voting on a $400,000 bond issue, which, it is estimated, will be sufficient to cover the cost of about fifty of the 100 miles of new highway decided upon. The county will be asked to build the rest of the mileage, dividing its appropriation of $400,000 into three equal annual installments, one to be made next year, the second in 1919 and the third in 1920.

TAP RIDGE ROUTE.

The longest of the projected new valley arteries is one designed to tap the Ridge route of the State highway a few miles south of Tejon Pass. This road, as planned, will run straight west from Lancaster for eleven miles, then five miles north around Antelope Buttes, and thence due west on a line midway between the foothills and the Kern county line to Quail Lake, where it would swing into the Ridge route. The new highway will pass through the Esperanza district, with its highly-developed alfalfa, stock and dairy farms; the alfalfa and grain fields of the Del Sur district, the grain and almond territory around Fairmont, the Manzana almond district and the Neenach grain section. It will have a total length of a little over forty miles.

Eastward from Lancaster the same highway will extend for ten miles, thence turning north four miles to the Redman school, which is in the center of a district that has come to be well known for its dairy farms and hog-raising industry. This route will pass through a well-settled part of the valley and will be accessible to a newer district farther east that is rapidly coming into its own.

From a point on the Mint Canyon highway three miles south of Lancaster it is proposed to extend another paved route six miles straight west to the Quartz Hill district, where a large acreage of Bartlett pears has been planted in the past few years. From the Mint Canyon route midway between Lancaster and Palmdale and about four and a half miles from each town a highway will run eastward ten miles to a point a mile east of Little Rock Creek, serving another new district that is being set out to both pears and alfalfa. This road, as now planned, will terminate within four or five miles of the Lovejoy Buttes, around which there has been much new development in the past year.

LITTLE ROCK ROUTE.

The southern end of the valley is to be opened up by a highway, extending south and east from Palmdale to a point within a few miles of the San Bernardino county line. Eventually it is planned to carry the route on to the county boundary to connect with a highway running on to Victorville, and which is now being projected by San Bernardino county.

The route out of Palmdale will go four miles due east of that place, then four miles south to the foothills, thence running east three miles to the Little Rock pear district. From Little Rock it will run almost due east for fifteen miles, passing through the Big Rock district, the Valyermo ranch, the Llano colony and a desert area now beginning to be dotted with well rigs on to the east of the latter spot.

East of Palmdale the highway will serve a district containing many young and thriving pear orchards. It will give the old and established Little Rock pear section a needed market route to the Southern Pacific Railway. It will be a boon also for the territory irrigated from the waters of Big Rock Creek, where are located a number of bearing pear and apple orchards, as well as alfalfa and dairy farms, and where development on a large scale has always been hampered by the problem of transportation.

ROAD EXCURSION.

The Antelope Valley Chamber of Commerce started an active campaign a week ago to win support from the county at large for the valley good roads programme. As the first step in the movement the organization took twenty-five representatives from various business and civic bodies of Los Angeles to the Antelope Valley in automobiles Friday afternoon, May 25, and spent all of the two succeeding days driving them over the district through which the proposed good roads are to be built. Included in the party were County Supervisors Jonathan S. Dodge and R. F. McClellan, J. W. Reagan of the county engineering department and Carl Haas of the county legal department.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce was represented on the excursion by John M. Sheridan, Charles C. Davis, G. G. Johnson and F. C. Wood. Hugh W. Bryson, F. R. Feitshans and W. L. Schmitz represented the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association. The Los Angeles Realty Board sent Egbert J. Gates and D. F. McGarry. Seward Simons and A. M. Dunn accompanied the party as representatives of the Municipal League. The Automobile Club of Southern California was represented by Standish Mitchell and Fred E. Wilcox. Other guests of the excursion included William H. Allen, Jr., president of the Title Insurance and Trust Company; Lloyd Smith of the Smith-Booth-Usher Company, Clarke Van Benthuysen, John Young, H. M. Finley and Burt Cole.

The officers and directors of the valley association turned out in force for the excursion. The board of directors was represented by George S. Marygold, Harry Lee Martin, W. C. Petchner, Russ Avery, O. P. Adams, H. C. Fertig, H. C. Lippincott and R. E. Muncy. Among the members who accompanied the party were Donald Barker, Austin Martin, H. L. Laughlin, Frank E. Walsh, H. M. Sheehan and Robert H. Orr. The officers of the organization are: George S. Marygold, president; Harry Lee Martin, Herbert L. Cornish and W. C. Petchner, vice-presidents; O. P. Adams, treasurer, and E. C. Bates, secretary.

Saturday was spent by the party in a tour of the southern and eastern parts of the valley, taking in the Palmdale, Little Rock and Big Rock districts, and the territory east of Lancaster. The western side of the valley was visited on Sunday, the party being taken over the forty-mile stretch of road between Lancaster and the Ridge route. All the members of the party expressed amazement at the progress that is being made in this part of the county and pledged their efforts to secure county co-operation in the construction of the projected new valley highway.

TRACT OPENING.

Verdugo Canyon Subdivision to be Placed upon Market Saturday.

Next Saturday and Sunday, June 9 and 10, have been set as the dates for the formal opening of the Selvas de Verdugo tract of the F. P. Newport Company in the Verdugo Canyon section of Glendale. The developers of the subdivision are arranging a programme of events following the lines of the Spanish fiestas of the old days, in keeping with the romantic associations of the district.

The property is a part of the original Verdugo grant of 37,000 acres, which included much of the present Glendale district. On it is located the old adobe dwelling once occupied by the Verdugo family, and under a large oak which shades this house one of the principal treaties separating California from Mexican rule is said to have been signed.

Extensive street improvements have just been completed in the subdivision in preparation for the opening and other work is now being started. The property comprises 400 acres of valley and foothill lands.

TO REMEMBER FIGHTERS.

Moose Lodge will Keep Enlisted Members on the Rolls.

At the regular meeting of the Los Angeles Lodge, No. 386, Loyal Order of Moose, it was decided that any members who enlist in the military or naval service shall be carried on the books in good standing for the duration of enlistment.

Many members have enlisted and undoubtedly there will be many more, and the lodge feels that the least it can do for them is to let them know they will not be forgotten.

STOCK RANCH SOLD.

A deal was closed at Ventura last Thursday, whereby W. F. Holt sold a 4800-acre stock ranch near Piru to Sterling Price, a wealthy Orange county beet rancher and cattleman. The consideration is given at $50,000 cash. Mr. Holt purchased the ranch a year ago, from R. W. Stephens, millionaire Kern River oil field operator. The sale to Mr. Price was made through the agency of J. B. Sherwood of this city.

OUTSIDER WINS FEATURE EVENT

Kentucky Handicap Goes to Added Starter.

Only Entered After Stable-mate is Hurt.

Splendid Time Made on a Very Poor Track.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

LOUISVILLE (Ky.) June 2.—The four-year-old Transvaal-Ethel Simpson colt, King Gorin, owned by R. L. Baker & Co. of Lexington, under a masterful ride by Jockey Mack Garner and favored by a light impost of 106 pounds, won by a neck today the renewal of the Kentucky handicap from John W. Schorr's 3-year-old Broomstick colt, Cudgel.

Half a length back was Andrew Miller's Roamer, which made his first try for the event. Boots, coupled in the betting with Ed Crump, as the A. K. McComber entry, finished fourth, beaten for the show money by two lengths. Old Rosebud, the favorite, and Opportunity finished in the ruck after setting a terrific half-mile pace.

The time of 2:04 1-5 for the mile and a quarter was remarkable, considering the condition of the Douglas Park track, which was lumpy.

King Gorin had to be hard ridden to win. Turning into the home stretch he went to the lead with Roamer and Cudgel following, heads apart. The 116 pounds apparently [illegible] for Roamer against the lightweighted colts. Boots came from ninth into fourth place and behind him finished Hodge, Green Embroidery, Ellison, Old Rosebud, Opportunity and Ed Crump in the order named.

King Gorin was only considered as a starter after his stable-mate, Pif, Jr., had met with an accident, preventing him from being sent to the post.

The stake was worth $12,200 to the winner.

VETERANS TRIM STANFORDITES.

Barber and Hahn Put up a Nervy Scrap.

But McLoughlin and Bundy are too Good.

Miss Ewins Captures Cup for Ladies.

The firm of McLoughlin and Bundy added another tennis trophy to their collection yesterday afternoon after eliminating the young Stanford hopefuls, Allyn Barber and Herbert Hahn, in the final round of the handicap tournament by scores of 6-0, 6-3, 7-5.

Miss Mary Louise Ewins, the young lady from Kansas City, walked away with the only other championship to be decided on the Y.M.C.A. courts yesterday afternoon. In her final match she won from Miss Fay Rothenhoefer by scores of 6-1, 6-3. The men's singles championship was not played off, as the principals in the final round, Ralph Sindorf and "Pep" Jones, were in a rather pepless condition after fighting their way through the preliminary rounds.

Many fast and spectacular matches were played during the day, but there were none that could compare with the fight for the doubles championship in which McLoughlin and Bundy won from Hahn and Barber. At the start of the match the old-timers had the Stanford lads on the run all of the time, taking the set in straight games. In the second set Herb Hahn came through with some spectacular playing, besides coming through and winning his services in easy style.

In the final set the Stanford boys came through with some spectacular drives that kept Mac and Bundy on the jump. Toward the latter part of the contest they seemed to get onto Bundy's reverse serve, driving it all over the court. Throughout the contest McLoughlin put up a high-class exhibition, although at times he was unable to control his drives.

Another doubles match that rivaled the finals in spectacular plays was the semi-final match between the Reinke brothers and the Stanford players. In this match the collegians were forced to a 6-4, 7-5 contest before going into the finals.

Another neat exhibition of a driving game was given in the finals for the ladies' singles when Miss Ewins and Miss Rothenhoefer met. Both players relied upon drives to win their points, but Miss Ewins proved the steadier of the two, as the final score indicates. Miss Ewins proved herself to be a good sport when she refused to take the handicap awarded her by the committee. Both played from scratch.

Every other event on the programme had been finished before it was finally decided who should play in the singles for the trophy. When the semi-finals started between Ralph Sindorf and Roland Reinke in the upper half both players were nearly exhausted from their previous matches. After a long-drawn out contest Sindorf won, 9-7, 6-3.

In the lower half, "Pep" Jones and Wilson Jones staged the longest match during the tournament when they battled for nearly two hours before a winner could be picked. As a result of these hard matches Jones and Sindorf were both in such a worn-out condition that their match was postponed until some time this next week.

Following are the results:

Ladies' singles, final round—Mary Louise Ewins defeated Fay Rothenhoefer, 6-1, 6-3. Both players played from scratch.

Men's doubles: Third round—Reinke and Reinke defeated Puffer and Balthis, 6-1, 6-1. Semi-finals—Barber and Hahn defeated Reinke and Reinke, 6-3, 7-5. Final round—McLoughlin and Bundy defeated Barber and Hahn, 6-0, 6-3, 7-5.

Men's singles: Second round—W. Jones (scratch,) defeated M. Rogers (15) by default; Tominaga (15,) defeated Jaspas (15,) 6-2, 7-5; H. Blakeslee (15,) defeated R. Rager (scratch,) 6-3, 7-5. Third round—H. Snodgrass (-15,) defeated H. Blakeslee (15,) 7-5, 6-3; R. Sindorf (scratch,) defeated E. C. Simmons (½15,) 7-5, 1-6, 6-4; P. Jones (15,) defeated C. Barber (-15,) 6-1, 6-1; W. Jones (scratch,) defeated Tominaga (15,) 1-6, 7-5, 6-3. Fourth round—R. Reinke (½15,) defeated H. Snodgrass (-15,) 6-1, 6-1; R. Sindorf (scratch,) defeated R. Puffer (½30,) 4-6, 10-8, 6-4; P. Jones (15,) defeated John Byers (½30,) 6-2, 3-6, 8-6; W. Jones (scratch,) defeated W. F. Keen (½30,) 6-1, 6-4. Semi-final round—Ralph Sindorf (scratch,) defeated Roland Reinke (½15,) 9-7, 6-3; "Pep" Jones (½15,) defeated Wilson Jones (scratch,) 3-6, 8-6, 6-1.

COLLEGE ATHLETICS TO BE RESUMED NEXT FALL.

[A.P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

NEW YORK, May 25.—The conviction is growing among close followers of college sports that athletic activity will be resumed at almost all of the eastern institutions when they open next fall. Several meetings and conferences are to be held to discuss this subject in the near future and if advance expression of opinions counts it is apparent that sentiment is strongly in favor of a restoration of competitive conditions which prevailed before the declaration of a state of war.

Undoubtedly the statement by President Wilson indicating that he thoroughly believes in a continuation of sport at the colleges "as a real contribution to the national defense" has had a direct bearing upon the situation. There was a wide difference of opinion among members of the various university athletic associations early this spring when sport schedules began to be cancelled.

A number were in favor of maintaining the regular system until such time as it should seem that competitive contests were interfering with the military training programme. Those institutions which continued their schedues, however, found it difficult to secure suitable opponents under the prevailing conditions and it was soon realized that the situation would have to be adjusted if there was to be the usual co-operation next autumn.

It is with this idea in mind that the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the Graduate Athletic Managers' Association have decided to meet and discuss plans for a revival of college sports under restrictions in keeping with the war spirit of the times. Several suggestions have been advanced which may be incorporated in the temporary rules or eligibility code to govern sport while war prevails.

These include the suspension of both the one-year and the freshman rule, thus permitting any regularly enrolled student to compete as a member of a varsity team as well as limiting areas of competition; coaching, admission fees and the apportionment of same to worthy causes, such as the Red Cross. It is conceded that under these suggested changes the standard might be lowered in certain lines of sport, such as the highly-developed football played by certain of the larger university elevens. To offset this it is pointed out, however, that more students would try for the various athletic combinations and training would be adopted upon a broader scale.

SAN DIEGO TO PLAY NORWALK

Out-of-town Schools Reach Final Prep Game.

Whittier Nosed Out by the Southern Team.

South Pasadena Beaten by Norwlk Nine.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, June 2.—The San Diego High School baseball team worked its way into the finals for the Southern California prep championship by trouncing Whittier High here this afternoon, 7 to 2. While errors figured largely in the early scoring, Coach Price's diamond stars whanged out enough runs in the latter part of the game to win a victory. The San Diego boys were outhit. Fast fielding on the part of Don Walters, third baseman, started two double plays, breaking up Whittier rallies at critical moments.

Whittier boys showed that they have been well coached, but lack the ability to come through in the pinches. In the sixth inning they filled the bases with three hits in a row, but were unable to cross the plate. Again in the ninth, two hits netted them nothing.

San Diego was a trifle nervous at the start, but settled down in the latter part and tramped all over the visitors. Capt. Dutch Eells took all the heart out of Whittier when he caught Pitcher Steere using the emery ball. From that time on he was not very effective.

One bad error in the fourth, coupled with a hit, passed ball and a walk, allowed Whittier to score two runs. The locals came back in the fifth, however, scoring two runs on two errors and two bases on balls. The Price boys earned two in the seventh on a walk and two hits. Two more were chalked-up in the eighth on two hits and a walk. Extra base hits were made by Butler and Eells. Shade of Whittier, registered three in four times up.

The victory makes ten wins and one defeat for San Diego. The score:

Whittier, 2; hits, 11; errors, 3.
San Diego, 7; hits, 8; errors, 3.
Batteries—Steere and White; Randall and Simpson.

'RAH FOR NORWALK.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WHITTIER, June 2.—Little Norwalk defeated South Pasadena High School in a one-sided baseball game here this afternoon by a score of 9 to 4 and won the right to meet the winners of the San Diego-Whittier game for the Southern California title under the California Interscholastic Federation.

Good mound work, good team work and heavy batting tell the story of Coach Wallace's proteges. Thornton of Norwalk has pitched seven no-hit games this season. He is the only veteran on the team. Coach Wallace has built up his winning aggregation with entirely new material except his pitcher.

South Pasadena evidently had a off day else it is difficult to see how the team got in on the semi-finals. The first score of the game was made by Norwalk in the third and from that time to the end of the game maintained a lead. The score:

Norwalk, 9; hits, 10; errors, 6.
South Pasadena, 4; hits, 8; errors, 3.
Batteries—Thornton and McCoy; Snow and Wheaton; umpire, Gohenix.

JOHNSON SETS MARATHON MARK.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

DENVER (Colo.) June 2.—Ted Johnson of Salt Lake City today won the fifth annual renewal of the Rocky Mountain News modified marathon, covering the 16 2-5 miles in 1h. 4m. 16 1-5s. The best previous time was 1h. 4m. 41 3-5s.

Johnson covered the greater part of the course far in advance of the thirty-eight other entrants.

DARCY'S BODY AT BAY CITY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, June 2.—The body of Les Darcy, Australian boxer, who died after enlisting in the United States Army Aviation Corps, arrived here today from Memphis on its way to his home. The body will lie in state tomorrow in the Hall of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and be escorted on Monday to a steamer.

Honorary pallbearers named today included J. L. Herget, J. C. Welsh, James Griffin, Edward Harlon, James Kelly, Al Young, Sol Levinson, Harry Foley, Alec Gregg and James Tausig, all well known in the sports world of the Pacific Coast.

FAMOUS RELIC BADLY MARRED.

Angels Pound Spider Baum Quite Viciously.

Bradley Hogg Slips up in Seventh Inning.

But Recovers in Time to Head off Rally.

BY HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

Constant practice in knocking the spots off the Seals has made the Angels very proficient, and they can now beat them with one hand tied behind their back. Their most recent exploit was a 7 to 4 victory over the leaders. Everybody knew Chance's men could beat the Seals, but a lot of them came out to look on just the same. This is more fun than staying home and taking it for granted.

POOR OLD SPIDER.

Having no respect, whatsoever for age and reputation, the Angels batted Spider Baum around the lot, sacrificing him to make what is technically known as a Roman holiday. The Spider says that he would rather pitch on the Fourth of July than on a Roman holiday. He is not strong for this hyphenated stuff. In the seventh inning he retired at the end of a misspent life to let a pinch-hitter bat for him. By that time the Angels had exhausted their supply of high explosive shells, and were unable to score on Pat Dougherty, the duly accredited finish-upper of the San Francisco pitching staff.

Bradley W. Hogg pitched sterling ball except in the seventh, when somebody seems to have changed the ball on him. For a time in that round it looked as if the Seals might slaughter Hogg and hang him up by the heels, as is the custom in our best abattoirs. On second thought he raised strong objections to this, and retired the visitors after three had counted.

RAH FOR ZEB.

Zeb played short as per advertisement, and was enthusiastically greeted by a reception committee composed of 5000 bugs.

Chance, as on the day before, came in to inspect the crew before it embarked on the expedition. He had picked up two more pounds—

Defenders of the nation, past and present.

These are the soldiers who fought in '61, and the soldiers who will fight in 1917—and as much longer as Uncle Sam needs their services. Some of the old soldiers will soon be leaving—leaving for the "last" trench. All of the young soldiers will soon be leaving—leaving for the "first" trench, and some of them may never return. They had an auto ride last Thursday, in Velie cars furnished by the Lord Motor Car Company.

HERE'S A GROUP OF UNCLE SAM'S TROOPS; THEY'RE THE KIND WHO ARE NOT AFRAID

YOU perhaps take a decided interest in the developments connected with the present war. You read your newspaper and you talk about this or that phase of the plans being made by our government for actual battle. But, after all, you know nothing of war but what you have heard or read—you have never seen actual battle.

Out at the Soldiers' Home in Sawtelle, however, there is a body of men who "do" know war. War in all its fury, war with the glory stripped from it, and war which has left its scar upon them in saber cuts, severed limbs and sightless eyes. These men also take an interest in the present war and there is a bit of a possibility that they are taking a very much livelier interest in it than you are.

But the veterans "encamped" at Soldiers' Home have little opportunity to see any of the actual preparations being made for war. Not, indeed, until the Lord Motor Car Company took the captains of all companies at Sawtelle to the training camp at Arcadia this week did they see at first hand how Uncle Sam is again getting ready to fight.

"EATS," TOO.

In a string of several brand-new Velie cars, which had never been on the road before, the men were driven to Arcadia, driven over the grounds, shown about by the officers in khaki and treated to a "mess" at the officers' table.

The trip from Soldiers' Home to Arcadia in the big Velies was a decided treat to the gray-haired veterans and served to bring back to their minds the days when they were young men in the training camps for Civil War soldiers. Naturally, the striking contrast between the present-day training camps and those of '61 was noted.

"In '61 we went into battle without half the training these young men have already had at Arcadia," said Capt. Robinson of Co. I. "We were half-fed, half-clothed and half-sick when events forced the government to put us up to the firing line. See that scar on my head? That's from a saber cut. See that stiff foot? A bullet went right through it, before I was 17."

According to these men who fought in the Civil War, the tents, housing, food and entire equipment of the soldier of today is far superior to what the men who won the battles of former years had. The chances of sickness have been reduced and the personal welfare of the men is being looked after.

The excursion through the training camp in the Velies was a decided treat to the old soldiers, but was not more enjoyed than the trip from Sawtelle to Arcadia in the handsome, easy-riding cars. The veterans seldom get out to see the whole of California's glories and were enthusiastic about the blossoming orange groves, myriad roses and fields of grain and hay. The cars, too, came in for their full share of praise, and the knowledge of things of the motor world which the aged men have acquired is remarkable.

The suggestion was made that many thousands of empty rear seats might be filled by soldiers from the home at Sawtelle if other Los Angeles motorists chose to emulate the example set by the Lord Motor Car Company in donating the Velies and drivers for the excursion to Arcadia.

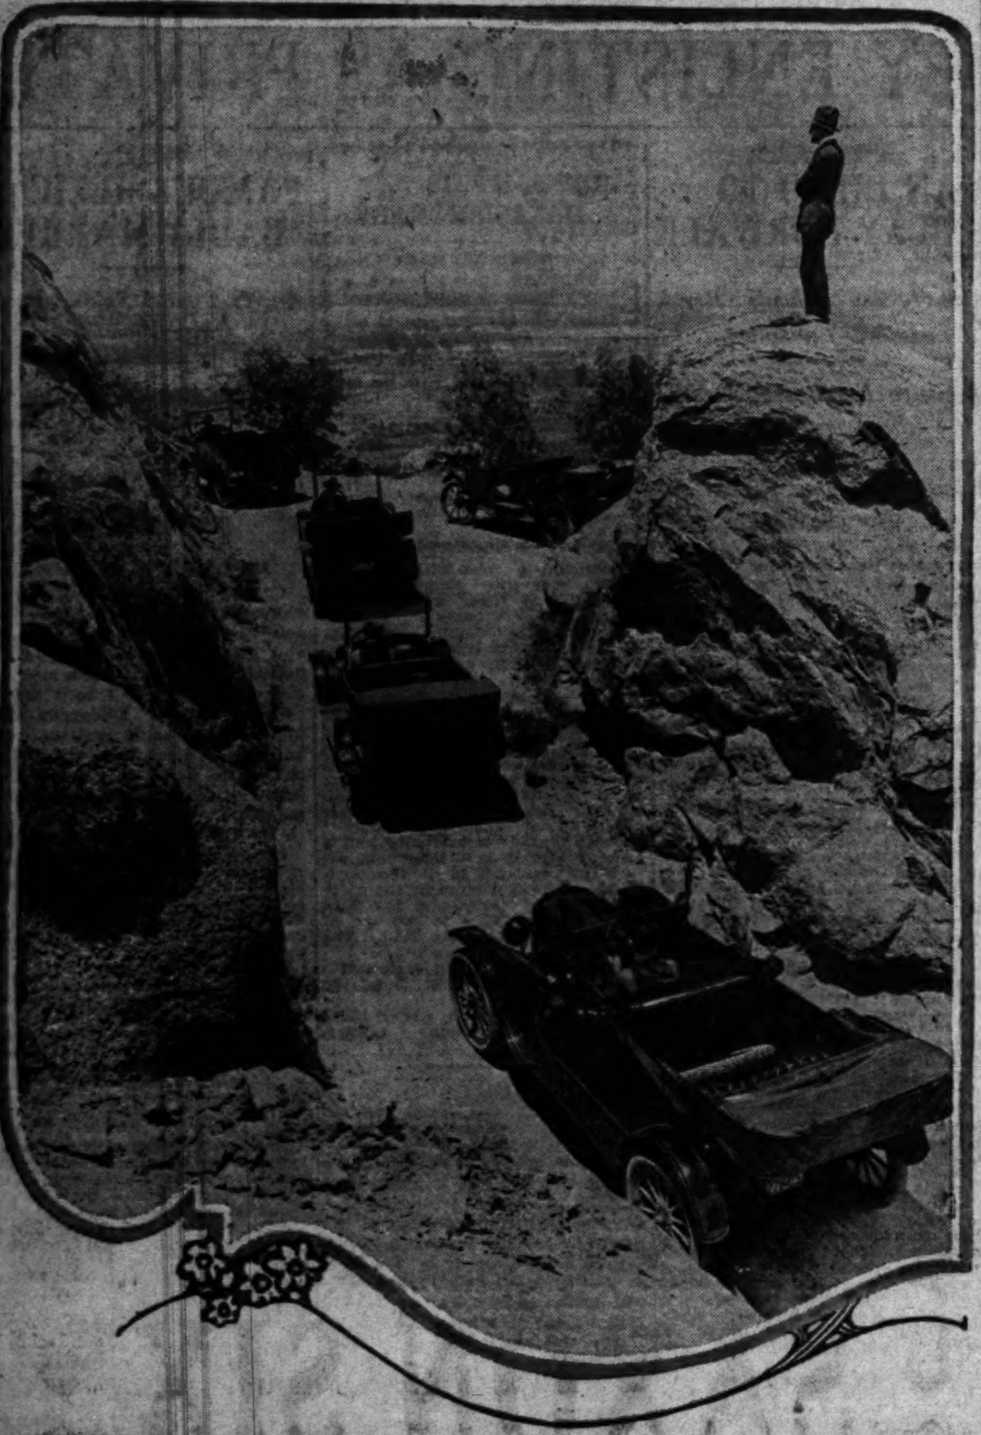
SCORES OF AUTOS RUN SIXTEEN HOURS A DAY IN TIRE TEST.



Tire "fleet" on Mt. Rubidoux.

This is the famous Goodrich tire-testing fleet, or rather, a part of it, which covers the entire United States, over all kinds of roads, at all seasons of the year. The five cars shown in the picture above were snapped on the top of beautiful Mt. Rubidoux, while taking part in a series of runs over Southern California roads. This part of the fleet is made up of a Marmon, Chalmers, Overland, Studebaker and Ford.

PROVING the value of Goodrich tires by actual road demonstration, a fleet of new Marmon, Chalmers, Overland, Studebaker and Ford cars, marked with the emblem of the Goodrich company's national tire testing department, has appeared on the roads of Southern California. This assembly is designated the Pacific fleet to distinguish it from the other five which have been named the Atlantic, the Lake, the Prairie, the Rocky Mountain and the Dixie fleets, after the various geographical sections of the country.

Southern California, while it is world-famed for its superb highways, has nevertheless many roads that are known to be hard on tires. Likewise the other sections of the country have their individual road difficulties, and it is to meet and overcome these problems that the Goodrich company is undertaking this unique and costly campaign.

A distinct and separate fleet of autos is constantly kept at work at Chattanooga testing experimental tires while the national fleets are accumulating immensely valuable data and information on the road conditions of the entire United States.

Sixteen hours a day, two shifts of drivers working with each car, keep the tire in almost continuous service spinning over the hard roads and up the steep grades of the Sunset coast.

"While these tires, taken from the local stock, are proving their slogan, 'Best in the long run,' on the local fleet, the same results are being reported from the other fleets on prairie mud roads, desert trails, mountain grades and concrete pavement," said the manager of the local Goodrich branch.

"Incidentally a number of the most popular motor runs radiating from Los Angeles are being utilized in the tire testing. Among this number probably the most scenic run recently taken was the popular drive up Mt. Rubidoux to the famous outdoor amphitheater at the foot of the cross, placed there by the early mission fathers.

"The result of the daily inspection and measurement of the tires being tested indicates, according to those in charge, that the tough black rubber tread is showing exceptional mileage and endurance against hardships, while Goodrich construction is bearing every legitimate stress and strain of hard service."

LOCAL DEALER'S TERRITORY INCLUDES ENTIRE STATE.

ONE of the surprises of the year in motor circles came Friday, when it was announced that Earle C. Anthony, Inc., thirteen years Packard distributor in Southern California, had received the northern part of the State as an addition to his territory. The extension of the Anthony sales and service to all parts of the State has begun with such activity that there were in operation ten Anthony stores, Friday, when the formal transfer took place.

The Anthony organization now is operating in Los Angeles, Pasadena, San Diego, Bakersfield, Fresno, San Jose, San Francisco, Oakland, Sacramento and Stockton. This rapid expansion was made possible by the large organization which has been trained in this city directly by Mr. Anthony and Leon T. Shettler, general manager.

The extending of the Anthony territory by the Packard factory is a distinct tribute to the officials of the distributing organization and the company itself. Since its beginning, the Packard policy has been to limit the territory to any one dealer. That an exception was made in this State was due to the Anthony service policy and sales expansion which he was able to put into actual operation a few days after the important deal was closed.

STUDY SITUATION.

The territory transfer was not made until after a careful study of the situation by C. R. Norton, general sales manager of the Packard factory, who spent two weeks going over the ground. The Anthony service and sales record were eloquent arguments in favor of the Southern California distributor's territory being extended so as to unify the Packard interests in the State.

Already firmly established in San Francisco and several of the other northern cities, Mr. Anthony and Mr. Shettler, as their initial step, obtained one of the largest service stations in the West for San Francisco. This is the Jerome garage, which in its three stories at Jackson and Polk streets, contains 70,000 square feet of floor space. This is being converted into a small Packard factory, where Louis Nikrent and Joe Schrumm of the Anthony shops here will be in charge of technical service.

One of the first steps will be to familiarize the Packard owners of the Bay City with the possibilities of distillate as fuel, following the successful plan adopted here in reducing the cost of filling the "gas" tank by half. This system also will extended over the State.

The Los Angeles organization is furnishing heads for practically all the stores. Walter Sahland, who has been in charge of the wholesale department here, will be supervisor of branches. Kenneth Walker of Los Angeles will be sales head in San Francisco and Frederick Bierlein of this city will go to Stockton in a similar capacity. Robert Alexander of the Reo sales force here, will be transferred to Sacramento.

IMPORTANT WORK.

The important work of starting the mechanical department has been left to Capt. Neuls, who is in charge of that work here. Frederick Webster is there in charge of parts.

"We are pleased to have the Packard for the northern part of the State and will continue those policies which made this expansion possible," said Mr. Anthony. "We will extend our service and service facilities to all parts of the State in the furtherance of our verbal trademark, 'The House of Service.'

"Our first aim is to create satisfaction among customers. 'Ask the man who owns one' means that he must be as pleased with service as he is with the machine itself. Our transaction will not end with the sale.

"It is in recognition of what we have accomplished in Packard sales and service that we have received the entire State as our territory. This makes this one of the most important Packard fields in the country."

James A. Allison, secretary-treasurer of the Indianapolis Speedway, has been notified by the aerial division of the United States War Department that the speedway, which recently was offered as a site for an aviation training school, has not been considered.

FORD IS ONE OF THE BIG STEEL BUYERS.

"It might be interesting for the automobile public to know that the Ford Motor Car Company is one of the largest individual consumers of steel in the world," says W. D. Dunham, Ford agent, who has been instrumental in selling so many of these popular cars during the past season.

"When they say they use 200,000 tons of steel it only gives one a rather vague idea of the amount used, but the statement of the largest single consumer is truly amazing and shows in part the tremendous proportions which the Ford business has reached.

"Another interesting feature of this Ford business is the fact that the entire efforts of the great Ford industry, with its many factories and assembling plants, are focused upon the making of just one car—the model T, as the chassis of all Ford cars are alike, the bodies only being different."

WHEN TRUCKS "LOAF" THE OWNER LOSES.

To keep a truck going every working hour of the day—that seems to be the big truck problem. At least one local company has offered a unique solution for the difficulties heretofore experienced with truck ignition.

The Electric Equipment Company recently received a shipment of service magnetos, which are to be loaned to truck owners while their magnetos are being overhauled or repaired. These magnetos can be adapted to almost any of the trucks now in use, and the truck need be laid up only while one magneto is being removed and the service magneto is being installed.

"We have also completed a magneto testing rack," stated one of the officials of the company, "which enables us to connect up a magneto and test it under as near working conditions as possible. This means that we are able to test the spark produced under pressure, similar to the compression in the engine cylinders. We believe this new service will interest every truck owner and every truck driver, many of whom heretofore have been obliged to lay up their trucks while magneto repairs were being made, entailing a waste of time and loss of income."

"WOUNDED" TIRES NEED "FIRST AID."

Believing that almost every motorist can get double the tire mileage they now secure if they will only pay more attention to the care of their tires, B. F. Wade of the Wade Tire and Rubber Company, distributors of the Tyrian, recently made the following statement:

"When you cut your finger, you immediately wash it with some antiseptic and cover it with a plaster or bandage, to prevent the entrance of dirt. Then, if you have done the work properly and are blessed with a good constitution, you expect nature to take care of the rest and hope that the wound will be healed in a few days.

"Now a tire is operated under much more strenuous conditions than your finger. It is in constant contact with the road and any sharp particles of sand or gravel, jagged edges of stone, glass or nails with which the surface may be covered.

"Furthermore, no matter how rugged a constitution a tire may be endowed with by its manufacturer, it does not possess the wonderful automatic healing power of nature and therefore to give a tire a chance to render its full lease of life, added precaution must be taken in prompt attention to all cuts and bruises."

TEXAS CROPS ARE SURE TO BE LARGE.

"It seems remarkable how rosy business conditions appear after a country has had one or two smart showers," said C. G. Harness, local manger for the Master Carburetor Corporation of Detroit. "But showers cut a great deal of figure in Texas. Just two good ones may mean the making of crops, and the Lone Star State has been drenched and at the right time."

According to M. Katz, traveling representative from this office of the Master forces, and who has recently returned from the border, Texas will give a bumper cotton crop. While in San Antonio, he spent considerable time with quartermaster officials relative to the installation of Master carburetors on several hundred trucks now in the army service on the border.

MEADS'S TRIP EAST BRINGS RESULTS.

Three carloads of Racine horseshoe-tread tires will be shipped this week from the factory to the Pacific Rubber Company, distributor in California and the Southwest, according to wire information received last week from Roy R. Meads, the company's manager, who is now in Racine.

This large shipment is the result of Meads's trip East, he having left Los Angeles ten days ago with the avowed purpose of informing the factory heads of the great demand in this section for the Racine horseshoe-tread make of tires.

The Racine company is completing and equipping new plant units and the time is near when its output will be increased four-fold. There is no indication at this time of a tire shortage, as the tire-manufacturing companies are well supplied with stocks of material.

THREE TIRES SET MILEAGE RECORD.

George C. Jones of Wenatchee, Wash., drove into South Bend, Ind., recently in a car with three tires containing New Orleans air, the left front tire having covered more than 10,000 miles, and an average of sixteen miles to the gallon of gasoline. The car had registered 8000 miles before the trip. It had come from San Francisco through San Diego, Yuma, Ariz.; Phoenix, El Paso, San Antonio, Houston, New Orleans, Montgomery, Atlanta, Richmond, Washington, D. C., and New York, through Rochester and Cleveland to South Bend.

DEALERS GET OUT AND USE THE HOE!

The national preparedness programme recently received special recognition in Denver from the Car Dealers' Division of the Automobile Trades Association of Colorado in the form of an official thrift garden day. Twenty-six dealers took part, closing their places of business entirely or in part and giving themselves and their employees a chance to devote the day to making gardens.

Missouri has issued 125,577 licenses since February 1. The total number last year was 107,865.

TIRE PRICES MAY SOON GO SKYWARD.

R. H. Keaton, president of the Keaton Tire and Rubber Company, is a visitor in Los Angeles and is strong for "business as usual." In an interview Mr. Keaton said:

"It is not going to be a question of selling tires, but it will be a question of securing enough material to build tires to supply the demand. Owing to the tremendous demand for materials that enter into the manufacture of tires, manufacturers are finding it very difficult to buy these materials at any price. For instance, the present market price of Sea Island fabric is in the neighborhood of $1.50 per pound, and if the tire manufacturers were paying this price for fabric tires would surely be at least 40 per cent. higher than they are at the present time.

"The present price of tires is possible only because the manufacturers are protected by older contracts for fabric at a much lower figure than the present market price. However, these contracts will soon expire and must be renewed by the manufacturers, which will cause the price of fabric to go still higher. As a result, the manufacturer will have to raise his price considerably to offset the added costs."

Mr. Keaton also stated that at other branches he visited the motorists were availing themselves of the opportunity offered by the Keaton company of trading in their present tires for all they were worth, thereby avoiding purchasing tires at a considerable advance later on.

HAYNES
"AMERICA'S GREATEST LIGHT TWELVE"

Economical—

Thousands of Haynes owners in all parts of the country are daily proving that the high cost of motoring is a "bugaboo."

From 87 different sections of the country reports have been gathered by the Haynes factory, showing the actual performance records of 15,000 Haynes cars.

These records prove that the Haynes Light Six is one of the most economically operated cars on the market. Proof is given that Haynes cars require practically no additional repair work the second year over the first or the third year over the second, and run for years at an amazingly low upkeep cost.

But the Haynes is more than an economical car—it is durable and dependable, and has a reserve of power always in store for any emergency. It will surely pay you to investigate the Haynes Light Six.

"The Car of a Thousand Speeds"

Owners Drive This Car

MANY a man who for years has not been in the front seat of his own car now owns an Owen Magnetic—and drives it every time he rides. Also, men who never before have been able to drive a car drive this.

There is no diversion so pleasantly absorbing as driving an automobile—if you feel safe doing it. But of late years there have been so many cars on the road and such complications in equipment that many have given up this pleasure—feeling that only professionals now were competent to drive.

Now the pleasure of driving is made available again by the wonderful simplicity and ease of control of the Owen Magnetic.

One little finger lever does nearly all the work. You stop and start, increase and diminish speed—all as naturally as when walking. Traffic dangers vanish because the full power of this car is as truly your servant as are your own muscles.

And, whether you drive or not, a ride in an Owen Magnetic cannot be equalled by any other sensation of motoring. You are "cushioned along" with no jerk or jar. The power flows from engine to wheels, magnetically, without the use of harsh gears. Speed is controlled like water from a faucet.

The mechanical supremacy of this car is matched by the artistic supremacy of the bodies with which it is equipped—either from stock or to order.

HEN A WOMAN LIKES A CAR SHE BECOMES A GREAT BOOSTER.

"For that reason I wanted a car that not only embodied ease of control and action, but would also accommodate several friends comfortably. The intimate sociability afforded by the Chandler four-passenger roadster is one of its most delightful features, for the driver can enjoy her guests as she drives. So little concentration and effort are required to drive the Chandler that I can chat and enjoy my friends' company as much, if not more so, than in the electric I formerly owned.

"Of course, dependability and the assurance that somewhere out on a lonely road the car wouldn't get balky was of prime consideration, too, and influenced me largely in my selection of a Chandler. So many cars, after they have been driven a few hundred miles, become almost human in their balkiness and stop short in a most disconcerting, embarrasing fashion.

"There's a wonderful amount of satisfaction in driving a car that reflects elegance and high-class equipment, such as the Chandler possesses. It largely typifies the tastes and artistic ideal of the fastidious woman who drives it and becomes something quite personal.

"I believe I have discovered the secret of why more than 40 per cent. of the Chandlers sold are driven by women, and it is the case of gear shifting. Just the merest touch of the finger is all that's necessary, eliminating all that awful tugging and straining which so many cars demand. This, of course, makes an extra-strong appeal to the timid, nervous woman who is just learning to drive and who finds many of the models on the market formidable in their complications and difficulty of operation."

Don Smith, manager of the Earl V. Armstrong, local distributors for the Chandler, declares that Mrs. Boles's ideas must be shared by many other social prominents in Los Angeles and Pasadena, for many recent sales have been to women who are replacing their electrics with Chandler chummy roadsters.

Worse Than Gout!

HARPER HAS CURE FOR ALL PANICKY SPASMS.

"DON'T get panicky!" This is the subject that H. B. Harper, general sales manager of the Willys-Overland Company, recently selected for a special article in the factory publication called the Willys-Overland Starter. Hitting straight from the shoulder, calling a spade a spade, and pointing to the remedy for every attack of pessimism that exists in the United States, Mr. Harper says:

"'As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he.' That was remarked long before your time or mine, but it has not lost its potency.

"You can make your business just as bad as you think it's going to be; likewise, you can build it up if your thinker isn't out of joint.

"Medical men tell us many a sick man lives to a ripe old age because you couldn't make him believe he was sick, and many a bed-ridden invalid railroaded himself there through over-indulgence in imaginary ills.

"There are business men going broke this next year because they think the war is going to kill business. Their live competitors are going to swallow them up for no better reason than that their's are the healthier minds.

"Don't get panicky.

"Don't let the newspapers of your town become panicky. If they are showing symptoms, get up a delegation of your red-blooded business men to call on them and convince them that the war is making Uncle Sam the merchant of the world—without compensation—and that it's up to the newspapers to smile.

"Bad weather isn't due to the war; bad weather isn't going to last forever. If there's gloom anywhere in the industry it can more honestly be attributed to weather than to war. It'll quit raining—it always has.

"And business will be good."

As a result of all this there has been a big demand for "Nash territory," so much so in fact that it now commands a premium. One of the big features of the plant is a body-building plant, 152x257 feet in size and five stories high.

H. J. Coger, manager of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Southern California distributors of the Nash products, reports an increase in sales, both retail and wholesale, throughout the district controlled by them.

The Richmond (Va.) Automobile Dealers' Association Board of Trade Inc., has been chartered. One of the first actions of the new body was to name an appraiser who will appraise all cars offered in trade for new cars. The appraiser will keep a record of the individual cars for the use of the dealers at any time.

"Then we have the impulsive man, the one who will run in every week to get his battery tested for a month or so and then let it go for six months and come in with his battery in pretty bad condition. He has entirely forgotten it. He recognizes the fault as his and has it fixed up without throwing the burden of the blame on the battery.

"There is the man that breezes in and says, 'My battery's on the bum,' fix it up,' runs out again, comes in again the next day and wants to know why it isn't fixed up thinks it is terribly slow work, but is perfectly good-natured about it.

"When we see a battery with the box all corroded from over-filling or careless filling we can only surmise that its owner, careless in the use of his car, is careless and neglectful in other ways.

"When we get for repairs a battery that has been patched and repatched and then patched again until it has come to a point where repairs are really more expensive than a new battery, we naturally surmise that its owner is something of a 'tight-wad.' In fact, to the experienced battery man there are as many signs of character in a battery as there are in a man's hand-

You Have Power to Spare in the

GRANT SIX

$975
at Los Angeles

THE GRANT SIX has one horse power for each 110 pounds of car weight. No other six in its price class can make such a showing. No wonder the GRANT SIX averages 20 miles to a gallon of gasoline and 900 miles or more to a gallon of oil. No wonder that 7000 miles or more are obtained from standard tires.

With the light weight, high powered Grant Six, you can climb hills and pull through sand and mud which would stall many other cars The sturdy Grant Six is built to last. In every part of the country the Grant Six has made a name for itself as a car of utmost dependability and continuous service.

When you pay $975 for the Grant Six you buy as much of service and performance as you get in any car up to $1000 to $1100. Over 20,000 people will buy Grant Sixes this year and if you're wise you'll be one of them.

Gentlemen:--

As to the Velie Six. I have driven Velies for some four years, and the more I drive them, the more I like them. I have driven my new Velie 5300 miles in five months, and I am perfectly honest in saying that I consider it to give greater value for the money than any car I know of.

I would be lacking in appreciation did I not express to you my sincere thanks for the splendid treatment I have received at your hands. Courtesy and consideration of your customers' interests seem to be inculcated in all your employees, so much so in fact, that one goes into your establishment with the feeling that you are anxious to please.

Very truly,

He's the King of "Dodgeville."

The name of Fillmore, a village of 1500 people, should be changed to Dodgeville. The reason is apparent, for John Opsahl, agent for the Dodge car, has sold as high as thirty-three machines of that make in a month. It is claimed there are more Dodges than "Peace Ships" in Fillmore and vicinity. Opsahl claims that no other car has been able to do the things which he does, climbing Republic hill, with a grade as steep as 44 per cent., being one of his favorite stunts, and therefore the natives won't buy other makes. The lower picture shows Opsahl at the wheel of his Dodge in an orange grove and the upper one is a view of Republic hill. To get traction on this hill it is necessary to carry five people in the car and ornament the rear tires with heavy skid chains.

AGENT IN MERE VILLAGE SELLS THIRTY-THREE CARS IN A MONTH

ONE Saturday afternoon not so many weeks ago, a stranger drove his car into the little town of Fillmore in Ventura county and stopped in the main business block. He was an automobile man and from long habit he cast his eye over the line-up of cars that were parked along the street. What he saw made him look twice and then register great surprise. A hasty count revealed twenty-one Dodge cars parked along the street, more than all other makes put together, not even excepting the well-known product of the good King Henry of Detroit.

What the automobile man saw was not an unusual sight for Fillmore, either, it is claimed. In fact, it was a quite natural gathering for Fillmore—a daily tribute to the very remarkable sales methods of John Opsahl, Dodge dealer in that town, who has almost succeeded in making the word Dodge the only synonym for "automobile" that Fillmore folks can think of.

SPECTACULAR.

"To say that Opsahl's sales methods are spectacular is putting it very mildly, indeed," said Harold L. Arnold. "Perhaps it would be better to put it in the past tense and say they 'were spectacular.' Today Opsahl rarely demonstrates a Dodge before he sells it. 'They know what a Dodge is up here now,' said Opsahl. 'The groceryman doesn't have to demonstrate a bar of Ivory soap to you, does he?' And that is about the situation Opsahl has achieved.

"If you ever go through the town of Fillmore, glance at the hills north of town to the right of the mouth of the Sespe. There you will see a road leading up a hillside, a road apparently engineered by an enterprising mountain goat. Once it led to an oil well now abandoned, but today it belongs undisputedly to John Opsahl. With grades that run from 35 to 44 per cent. it is a road with a very decided slant to it, to put it conservatively.

THEY'RE SATISFIED.

"Up and down that road, Opsahl has demonstrated the Dodge so often that nobody in Fillmore asks to see it done any longer. With five passengers in the car, to get the traction necessary, and with chains on the rear wheels, the Dodge travels the road whenever called upon to do so. But Opsahl is never bothered by meeting other cars on the road. For if anybody else ever did succeed in climbing Republic hill, it is not on record that they tried it a second time. The last attempt was made by

LATIN AMERICANS LIKE LOUD COLORS.

That Latin Americans go in for loud effects in automobile colors and have no fondness for the conventional hues which predominate in our country, is the discovery which has been made by the Empire Motor Car Company, according to E. Junior Bennett, sales manager of the Empire Motor Sales Company, distributors locally for this popular line of cars.

South Americans, Cubans and Porto Ricans all seem to prefer cars of brilliant-colored bodies, judging from the special orders which have been received by this Indianapolis factory, which has secured a strong foothold in many of the foreign countries.

"A few days ago," says Mr. Bennett, "the Empire factory shipped eight cars to Havana; one was a seven-passenger cruiser type, finished in violet purple, with white wire wheels, and a Victoria top, and all of the rest were finished in more or less flashy colors.

"After a car once gets a foothold in one of these countries it is a comparatively easy thing to keep on selling, with very little competition, as they seem to be more or less suspicious that the American manufacturer is going to put something over on them. When they do find a car that makes good, and which they have confidence in, it is mighty hard for a competitor to get a look-in."

B. A. Small, a salesman in San Francisco, Cal., bought a roadster last summer in which to cover his territory. Now he reports that he has traveled more than 22,000 miles, is still on the same set of tires with which the car was fitted when bought, has averaged twenty-seven and two-thirds miles to the gallon of gasoline and has used thirty-one and one-half gallons of oil.

AMERICAN WOMAN DEMANDS BEAUTIFUL, POWERFUL CAR.

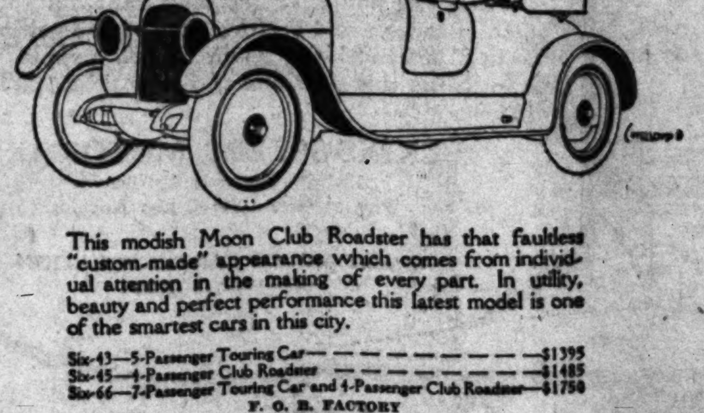
"THE demand of the American woman for beauty in the automobile she drives or rides in is actually the foremost cause of the growth of the Paige company, which makes necessary the thirty-one-acre addition on which we are starting our great new building to care for the business which we are sure will come to us during the next year," writes Harry M. Jewett, president of the Paige-Detroit Motor Corporation, to Stanley W. Smith, of Smith Bros., Los Angeles Paige distributors.

In line with the Paige policy of finding out the actual conditions which govern the public demand for automobiles, Smith Bros. have carried out in Los Angeles a detailed investigation of the preferences of women prospective buyers. Stanley Smith sums up the conclusions reached under four main heads:

"The woman prospective buyer demands, first, that her automobile shall be a beautiful car; second that it shall be an easy-riding car; third, an easy car to control; and, fourth, that the power flow shall be flexible. These simple phrases, which appear to be so easy to understand, represent a complex series of technical requirements to the trained automobile engineer. They have all been analyzed at the Paige factory and the steps which have been taken to secure the different features are a part of Paige engineering history. For example, in the matter of easy riding, the foundation of the Paige reputation is the famous original Paige cantilever spring suspension, supplemented by comfortably designed seats, and seat springs and upholstery, which represent a development of several years experience.

"The matter of ease of control is taken care of by providing a smoothly working clutch, easy gear shifting, smooth acting brakes and conveniently-arranged controlling devices. Each of these features has required months of individual study and experiment. The flexibility of power flow which gives the Paige its ability to skim over long, steep hills on high or slow down to a walking pace in traffic is the result of the most skillful engineering work on the motor. It is hard for the public to realize in answering four simple questions that they are determining the direction of the mental activity of scores of highly trained designers and technical experts at the Paige factory.

"Nevertheless the great increase in Paige sales from year to year has been found absolutely on determination of the exact qualities which make an automobile desirable and then working out every detail in harmony with this object. The Paige has been made 'The Most Beautiful Car in America' in addition to a car of wonderful power, endurance and economy, because American women prospective buyers place beauty first in making their choice."



This modish Moon Club Roadster has that faultless "custom-made" appearance which comes from individual attention in the making of every part. In utility, beauty and perfect performance this latest model is one of the smartest cars in this city.

BROADWAY SALESROOM DECLARED BIG SUCCES

BY M. A. LEACH,
Manager Leach Motor Car Company.

THE various manufacturers of motor cars which we represent have been kind enough, in the past, to pay us many compliments on the way we have gone about the distribution of automobiles, but all of the moves we had made, up to a week ago, had failed to bring forth as many compliments and as many words of hearty approval as we have received since opening our Fourth and Broadway showroom.

At the close of the first week, we sum up our net results as follows:

(1.) From the standpoint of advertising, it has been the biggest thing the Leach Motor Car Company ever attempted.

(2.) From the standpoint of sales, we have averaged one car a day of each make, or four cars a day in all, in addition to the business done at our Grand-avenue place.

(3.) From the standpoint of prospects, our books are so full of them that every salesman will have plenty to do for the next two weeks, in demonstrating and closing deals.

In short, we have done what we expected to, and considerably more. Broadway is a busy place. Hunderds of thousands of people, of all kinds—rich and poor, old and young, auto owners and prospective auto owners—pass along that fare every week, and almost day.

With four lines of Speed!

VAIL GETS SECOND IN BIG CINCINNATI RAC

DAZZLING the spectators with a tremendous burst of speed, Ira Vail in a Hudson Super-Six drove his car to victory when he won second place in the Cincinnati Sweepstakes on Memorial Day. He averaged 101.28 miles per hour for the 250 miles, his elapsed time being 2 hr. 27m. 57s.

Word has just reached Harold L. Arnold, Southern California distributor for the Hudson Super-Six, that Vail's Hudson displayed phenomenal endurance and speed. The winner of first place, Louis Chevrolet, driving a specially-built, high-powered Frontenac, was closely pressed by the Hudson during the latter part of the race. It was somewhat doubtful for a time whether he would be able to maintain his lead, but finally won by a narrow margin.

"This is but one of a series of remarkable performances by the Hudson Super-Six," said Harold L. Arnold.

"It will be remembered that it was a privately-owned, privately-entered and privately-driven Super-Six, which broke the world's

BOY SCOUT PLAN, STARTED HERE, MAKES HIT IN EAS

WHEN the plan was inaugurated for the establishment of a temporary school where the members of the Boy Scouts organizations were scheduled to be given instructions in rendering first aid to motorists, little did Andrew Baldwin, sales manager of the J. V. Baldwin Motors Company, realize that his idea would be put into practical working order throughout the East.

During the past week letters from all over the United States have been flocking into the Baldwin concern, heartily indorsing the plan and asking for detailed information regarding it.

Not only have various dealers over the country showed a keen interest in the plan, but the Mitchell factory officials have taken the matter under consideration and have announced that hearty co-operation will be given Mr. Baldwin when the establishment of the school is effected.

IT'S CATCHING.

Baldwin's idea has spread everywhere and renewed interest is being taken in it especially since war has been declared. Mitchell agents in every city of any size are being appointed organizers and the Mitchell car will be adopted as the official scout car.

In many cities automobile experts of the Mitchell factory have been placed in charge of a scout troop consisting of from fifty to 100 members, classes being held two and three times a week. It has been reported that the classes were so large in Marion, Ind., and Racine, Wis., that in order to accommodate the illustrious embryo "first aid" artists large halls with seating capacities of 600 to 900 have used.

[illegible]ANY WOMEN "PRAISE" CERTAIN CARS; SOME "RAVE" ABOUT 'EM.

If you'll be good you can go along!"

[illegible] Miss Marjorie D. Cole of No. 1109 Magnolia avenue is telling her pretty canine friend, shown in [illegible] picture, as she starts out in her Pilot car for a spin, and no one could blame the dog for promising. [illegible] Cole has a way that's all her own in describing the merits of an automobile, for where others [illegible] praise a car, Miss Cole almost goes wild over it. In fact, she "raves" about it.

[illegible]IRST, I commenced my 'automobile career' at the age of 8, and ran the entire aisle [illegible]mobiles.' Then (and whis[illegible]ly, lest the police department[illegible]) I drove a real for the [illegible] when I was 13. So you see [illegible] of quite a bit of experi[illegible] machines since they have [illegible]reached perfection," said [illegible] Cole.

"[illegible]ther, I have driven eleven [illegible] makes of cars—that is to [illegible] to really judge them. [illegible] won't mention the names, [illegible] they are all good cars, it [illegible] to compare them with my [illegible] the latter with no so-[illegible]monstration,' but merely on [illegible] of a Colorado friend, being [illegible] to take a chance on the ex[illegible] of a man who has driven [illegible] hundred thousand miles [illegible] tells me that the Pilot he bought two years ago—and is still using—is the best car he ever owned.

"Then again, my family knows the factory people and directors, and the kind of work their turn out.

"Trips? Plenty of 'em.

"I don't know which ones to tell of. There is the ride to San Bernardino in less than two hours—and, as is always the event in such cases, we took a detour on the wrong road. But the cantilever springs helped a lot and we kept up our—well, fast clip just the same. You see, we had to reach our destination at a certain time.

"Then again, I boast of being a fairly good driver, so don't judge me too harshly. Have you ever been up the San Gabriel Canyon? I went up the first grade on 'high' and was disgusted, because, although we made it, I did not feel the accustomed power in that six-cylinder motor. On the down grade I decided to use both compression and brakes. I reached for the emergency brake—and found it already partly on. No wonder we lacked power coming up that grade! Fortunately for my peace of mind no one had noticed it.

"Then again, I have tried the car in sand, through sage, fording streams and even up canyons where there were no roads, and I have never yet had to get out and see if the engine was running evenly, or do any walking to get help.

"And if one's chance in the heavy traffic depends on a quick 'get-away' the Pilot is always ahead of the other fellow's car.

"The car's gasoline consumption is exceedingly low, even in city driving, and I only put in a quart of oil every 300 to 400 miles, depending on the strain I give the motor. Water in the radiator—I generally use a teaspoon to fill it!

"There is only one real objection to the Pilot. The Pearl Motor Car Company maintains a splendid free service department for one year after purchasing, and unless something goes wrong soon I shall be cheated out of all that service work. I do not feel as though I were getting my money's worth. Some car!"

MANY CALIFORNIANS FAIL TO SEE THEIR OWN STATE.

IN SPITE of the fact that this State is a Mecca for motorists, there are thousands within its borders who own and drive automobiles who have not visited some of the world's most scenic spots, even though they are within easy riding distance of Los Angeles and nearby cities.

"See California first" is the advice of Froman Speers of the Bekins-Speers Motor Company, distributors in Southern California for the Haynes "light six" and "light twelve." Said Speers: "This State has almost everything to offer those who are figuring where they will go for their vacation. Why go outside its borders?

"Consider, for instance, the Yosemite and Lake Tahoe. Thousands of people from other States spend considerable time and money in order that they may visit these far-famed spots. And many travel by motor. Both of these picturesque and health-giving resorts are within easy reach of this section and still you will find thousands here who have never visited either."

Speers urges that the many Haynes owners in Southern California in making their vacation plans bear in mind that the Golden State with its mountains, fishing streams, lakes and seashore and, above all, its magnificent highways, offers places aplenty where they may recuperate and enjoy the outdoors.

ARMY OFFICER WANTS CAR WITH POWER AND SPEED.

FOR the purpose of inspecting the various army encampments near Los Angeles, and in order that he might have a car for his personal use, Col. J. M. T. Partello, well-known army officer, recently purchased a Chevrolet "Four-Ninety."

Col. Partello has been visiting the local volunteer regiments, and has taken an active part in whipping them into shape for Federal service. During the past month he has made several inspection tours to prospective sites for the western army base, one of which has been granted to San Diego. It is expected that a second will be made in close proximity to this city.

In order that he may execute his daily visits to army camps of this part of the State, Col. Partello has found it both time saving and economical to make his tours by using his Chevrolet. The car has proved a valuable asset in helping him speed up his recruiting and organization work that is now being carried on.

Col. Partello has seen active service in the Philippines and Cuba, and was one of the important figures in the Boxer uprising. Since that time he has been closely associated with army undertakings of this country. Two years ago he spent considerable time studying European war conditions. He has always been a student of militarism.

According to a statement made by Col. Partello, the light car will play a titular role in the present war preparedness movement. Trucks will be used for transporting ammunition and supplies, but important service has also been laid out for the light car.

"There are many reasons why I purchased a Chevrolet Four-Ninety for my personal use and also for aiding me in the performance of certain of my military duties, but one of the most important is that I find this car best adapted for light and speedy travel, in addition to it being economical to operate. It just suits the purposes that it is most needed for, especially in my case. For the man who wants to get 'there' I would heartily recommend the Chevrolet every time," declared Col. Partello.

"I have looked over the local auto market, and I find that the Chevrolet is one of the most powerful of cars in the lightweight class. The upkeep is nominal and the riding qualities are most comfortable," said Col. Partello to Mr. L. V. Starr, Southern California manager of the J. W. Leavitt Company, distributors of the Chevrolet.

Eddie Hearne, Louis LeCocq and C. H. Kirkpatrick have been restored to good standing with the contest board of the American Automobile Association.

DISTILLATE MAKES HILLS SEEM LEVEL.

Driving a Grant six touring car, 1917 model, from Los Angeles to Fresno, by way of Bouquet Canyon and Porterville, S. G. Frenaye, No. 1232 I street of the northern city, averaged for the entire distance fourteen and one-half miles to one gallon of distillate.

Frenaye, who until recently was a resident of Los Angeles, purchased his Grant six nine months ago, and in that time he has driven his car over all kinds of roads about 12,500 miles.

"The economy of the Grant on fuel and tires, as well as its all-round performance and dependability—as you automobile men say—has made me a strong booster for the car," writes the Grant owner. "I really believe the car shows more 'pep' when using distillate as a fuel than with gasoline. On the hill climb the Grant does not have to take a back seat for any of them. Undoubtedly its overhead valves in a great measure account for that."

SIXTEEN-VALVE CARS WILL SOON REACH LOS ANGELES.

WITH the announcement by the Pioneer Commercial Auto Company that definite promises of early shipments of several of the new models had been made by the White factory at Cleveland, interest in the sixteen-valve White four was renewed. For many months the immense White plant has been running at capacity in both its automobile and truck departments.

In performance the new sixteen-valve edition of the White has attracted the keenest attention of those who have been fortunate enough to ride in the first demonstrator received in Los Angeles—and in Southern California. It has been equally appealing to those who have a full appreciation of superstability and dependability combined with the acme of perfected lines and dignified luxury.

The local agency has touring cars now on display. Additional shipments of this model as well as runabouts, sedans and limousines are included in those promised for early delivery.

The White in its most unusual demonstrations shows tremendous power, extreme flexibility and rapid acceleration. The increased valve capacity results in higher engine speed and more power, while the perfect valving shows extraordinary power at low engine speed.

The manner in which the valve efficiency has been increased is interesting. The four valves in each cylinder are located at what might be called the corners of the cylinder. They are inclined inward at the top and set as close as possible to the cylinder walls, practically eliminating pockets and providing a direct flow of gas into the cylinders. The spark plugs are set squarely over the center.

ANNOUNCING THE NEW 4-PASSENGER
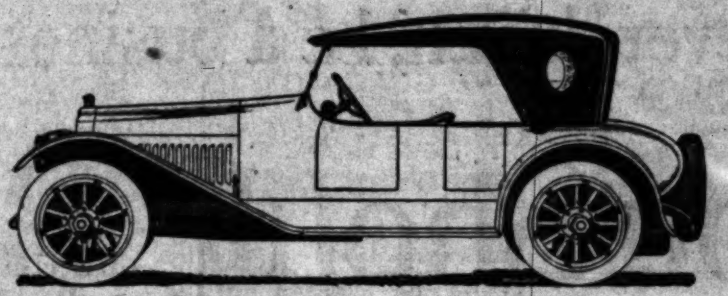
RUNABOUT.



WHITE
16 VALVE 4

This new model has a low, close coupled body of a distinctive design. It is a refreshing change from the common type of roadster.

To ride in the new sixteen-valve White is a motor education. It marks a distinct advance in motor construction and its performance will amaze you.

This double-valve principle has established the fact that valve capacity is more vital than added cylinders. Without surrendering the advantages of simplicity and ruggedness it provides a performance unapproached in other types.

The new runabout will prove a rare treat both in appearance and performance. If you are interested in the most modern of motor cars see the new 16-valve White Four.

Premier

The Aluminum Six with Magnetic Gear Shift

Listen—Here's the only sensible thing to do—take a look at this Premier today—get behind the wheel yourself—put it to every conceivable test—and if it proves itself more of a motor car than anything you have ever driven, be a business man and buy it for $2150

Why You Should Buy a Premier

Aviation Motor Dependability in a Motor Car. Premier is the only car in America, selling under $3000, in which you can get an aluminum motor. The aluminum motor is not an experiment. In fact, it has proven its superiority, in European war aviation, over the iron motor—the most grueling test to which any motor could possibly be subjected. In some of the most expensive motor cars in Europe aluminum motors have been employed for years. In Premier at $2150 you get just as good a motor as you could get in the $5000 and $7000 European aluminized cars. The advantages of Premier's aluminum motor are its lightness, its quickness, its accessibility and the extreme economy of its operation.

The New Push Button Gear Shift. Premier is the only car in the world on which you can get the wonderful Cutler-Hammer Magnetic Gear Shift as regular equipment. This is undoubtedly the greatest fundamental advance in motor car development since the advent of the electric starter. Its push button gear shift makes Premier the most easily handled car on wheels. It gives you a fascinating new control of your car in traffic and on steep hills, impossible with the old-fashioned hand gear-shift. Incidentally it makes Premier the only woman's gas car in existence—rendering the "Electric" unnecessary. Motor car engineers everywhere are taking for granted the ultimate adoption of some form of automatic gear shift. Meanwhile, you can get this tremendously desirable feature in Premier now—at $2150.

The Car With a Real Foundation. Premier's frame is eight inches deep—three to four inches deeper than the frames under even $3000 or $4000 cars. You cannot calculate how much this single Premier feature will add to the life of your car and how much it will save you in repairs. Premier, with its eight-inch bridge girder foundation cannot get loose and rattly, and its working parts cannot be thrown out of alignment. Don't forget that the use of an eight-inch frame is made possible entirely through the saving of weight in the aluminum motor.

Light Where Weight Is a Detriment—Husky Where Weight Is Wanted. Premier's aluminum motor takes one-eighth of a ton off the front end—and this 250 pounds has been redistributed to the back of the chassis—where weight and added strength are needed. As a result, Premier is so perfectly balanced that you can scarcely make it skid—and road swerve in Premier, even at the highest speed, is unknown. This superior ability of Premier to hold the road, combined with the astoundingly easy steering, makes Premier a most delightful and safe car to drive. Of course, the superior type of gear shifting adds still further to the driver's comfort.

Swings Around in the Narrowest Street. The fact that Premier turns in a 39-foot circle adds still further to its ease of handling. You don't have to go around the block to turn in a Premier. You can cut circles in a 40-foot street. Do you know of any other full-sized touring car that gives you this overwhelming advantage in crowded traffic?

Chic, Snappy and Full of Class. Premier is a ravishingly beautiful car. Its body lines are new. Its gun metal velours body finish is new. The "Foursome" is a new Premier idea, being a decided relief from the old-fashioned toy tonneau and the now overworked cloverleaf arrangement—which latter, incidentally, was also a Premier creation. No matter in what company you may park—your Premier will be the "cynosure of neighboring eyes."

Where Else Is There Such a Car at $2150? Premier is in the $3000 class in every respect but price. The present national situation does not call for abject economy, but there is never a time when a man ought to pay $3000 for a car if he can buy a more advanced car and a better performing car for $2150. It is worth noting that Premier is also an unusually economical car in operation. Its light, strong, Lynite-Aluminum motor "Fletcherizes" every drop of gas and keeps fuel costs down. Everything is so "get-at-able" that your garage expenses will run light. The car is easy on tires—due to its perfect balance and the smoothness with which it rides the roads. In short, Premier is not only a car you can afford to buy—what is even more important—it is a car you can afford to run.

Do the sensible thing—make up your mind to investigate Premier today. If you can't go to the salesroom conveniently, then telephone us and the car will be brought to your house. Put it to every conceivable test—if it makes good, buy it.

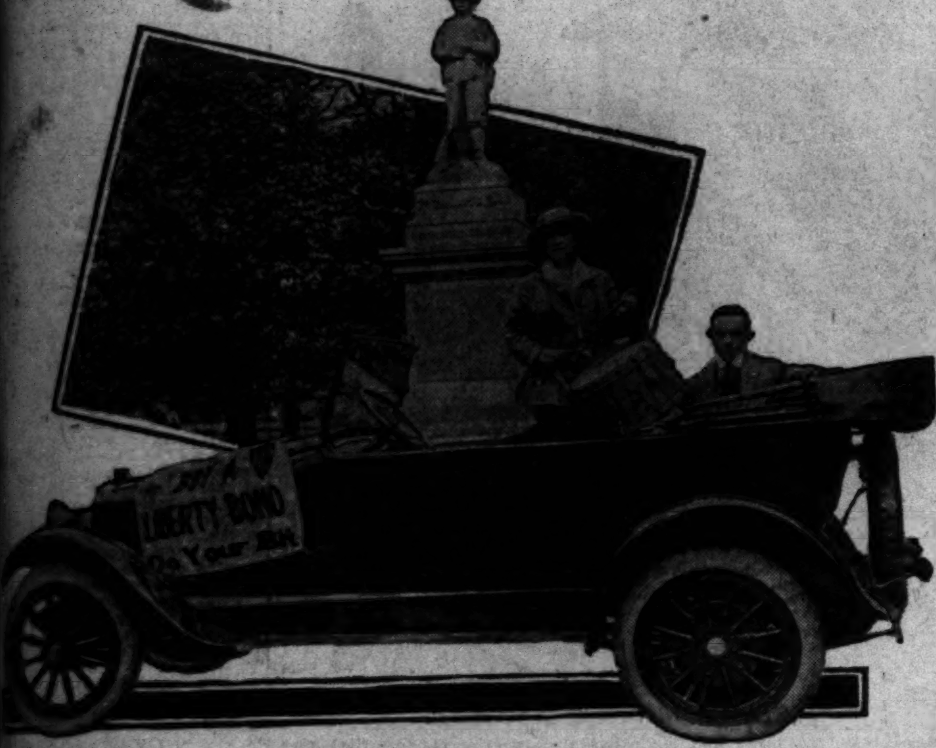
THERE'S MORE THAN ONE WAY TO SKIN A CAT OR SELL BONDS.



Drumming up trade for Uncle Sam.

e corner of Fifth and Hill streets the other afternoon, Leslie B. Henry, chairman of the bond distributing committee, and Ethel MacDonough, the crack girl drummer of the Orpheum circuit, with the aid of a Chalmers car, starting selling Liberty bonds a la "street fakir" style. And they sold bonds, too. Miss Ethel beat the drum. "Les" Henry spouted patriotism. A crowd gathered. Some one stepped forward and purchased a bond and then another. And then they stepped forward by the dozen. The experiment was so successful that you can expect to see a score of Chalmers on the street any day, with "spielers" disposing of war bonds right and left. The picture was taken as the car stopped, and before the crowd had started to gather. Five minutes later Henry and Miss Ethel were playing to a "crowded house."

TIN IS SCARCE; ORDERS TRIMMED.

Manufacturers of tin cans, in accordance with requests from Washington, are devoting the greater part of the present output for the canning of fruits and are for this reason temporarily compelled to neglect other industries, according to W. H. Damon of the Damon Specialty Company, manufacturers of Nonolio polishes for automobiles.

Unable to secure cans on the Coast for Nonolio, this company was compelled to place orders in the East, and even then the number requested was materially reduced. Somewhere on the road are four carloads of various-sized cans—185,000 in number—and destined for the Damon Specialty Company. This shipment is one of the largest to be sent to Los Angeles in some time. "As there seems to be a shortage in tin, we're thankful to get this amount," declared Damon.

11000 Partners
Working As One to Give Most Miles per Dollar

THE stock distribution by which 90 per cent of the members of the Firestone Organization accepted partnership in the Company, is a further move toward the betterment of the service to the public. It is a vital factor for the development of man power which is the lever of all successful business.

But while you may not be concerned with the ethical side of the partnership, you as a user of tires are vitally interested in its effect on the quality and mileage cost of Firestone Tires.

Now that Firestone workers are owners of the business, it is logical to suppose that there will be improvements all along the line. Efficiency has always been the Firestone watchword, and everybody knows that men are more efficient when personal pride and ambition are involved.

Firestone workers are literally Firestone builders, building not only tires but fame and business success. Action is quickened, ability encouraged, enthusiasm spurred. The results are plain: quality improved, production stimulated, most miles per dollar emphasized.

Equip with Firestone Tires and get the benefit of those long-established values which go with the Firestone name.

The Thrift of the Franklin Car
Our Response to the National Call

AS a people, Americans have so long been charged with wastefulness and extravagance that we have come to admit it as our National sin.

Perhaps the meanest thing that has been said of us is that our only idea of economy is to do without.

That, being a people of extremes, we can save only in the most drastic and obvious way.

That our idea of reducing household expenses is to discharge the help, wear our old clothes and cut the table where it will be felt the most.

That we must either waste coal or shut down the furnace and freeze.

There is just enough truth in this indictment to hurt.

Wasteful Economy vs. Constructive Saving and Use

The call to National economy ought rather to be a call to National Thrift.

Here in the richest country in the world—with nation-wide employment and prosperity, with wages higher than they have ever been in the history of the world, with 935,000,000 acres of tillable land and unprecedented returns for the farmer—we can support another hundred-million people, whether in this country or Europe, on what America wastes, if we only apply brains to our problems, National and individual.

Motor Traffic a Vital Factor in National Life

It takes no brains to practice the economy of doing without.

A good example of this idea of economy is the man who buys a heavy, extravagant car and then limits its use.

Whatever the times or conditions, the Franklin owner knows that he stands firmly on a thrift basis.

That if all cars were as efficient as the Franklin, America would save Four Hundred Million Gallons of gasoline and $192,000,000 worth of tires every year—without cutting one mile off the stupendous motor-car mileage of the United States.

There is Needless Waste of Gasoline and Tires

Thrift always implies a sense of values.

What is the mileage value of a gallon of gasoline—or a set of tires?

Do you realize that all the twenty-odd years of motor-car designing has never produced anything like a standard of mileage for either gasoline or tires?

That gasoline, worth twenty miles and upward in the scientific-light-weight Franklin, drops as low as nine miles and even six miles in many another make of fine car?

That while the Franklin owner is getting his ten thousand miles from a set of tires, the typical fine car owner is getting only five thousand or less?

Franklin Owners Have the Facts on Comparative Costs

Where the heavy car wastes gasoline in the drag of its dead weight—the Franklin devotes its power to mileage.

Where the heavy car hammers its tires out before their time—Franklin light unsprung weight with flexible construction doubles the tire mileage of the Franklin car.

Study the Used Car prices! They tell the same facts in terms of depreciation, emphasizing the security of the Franklin owner in the investment value of his car.

Under all circumstances of road, climate, and the cost of gasoline and tires, the man with a Franklin owns and runs his car on the most favorable terms.

These factors make the Franklin peculiarly the car of free use, of staunch service, of small upkeep, of low depreciation.

Twenty thousand Franklin owners saw these things before there was any call to National Thrift.

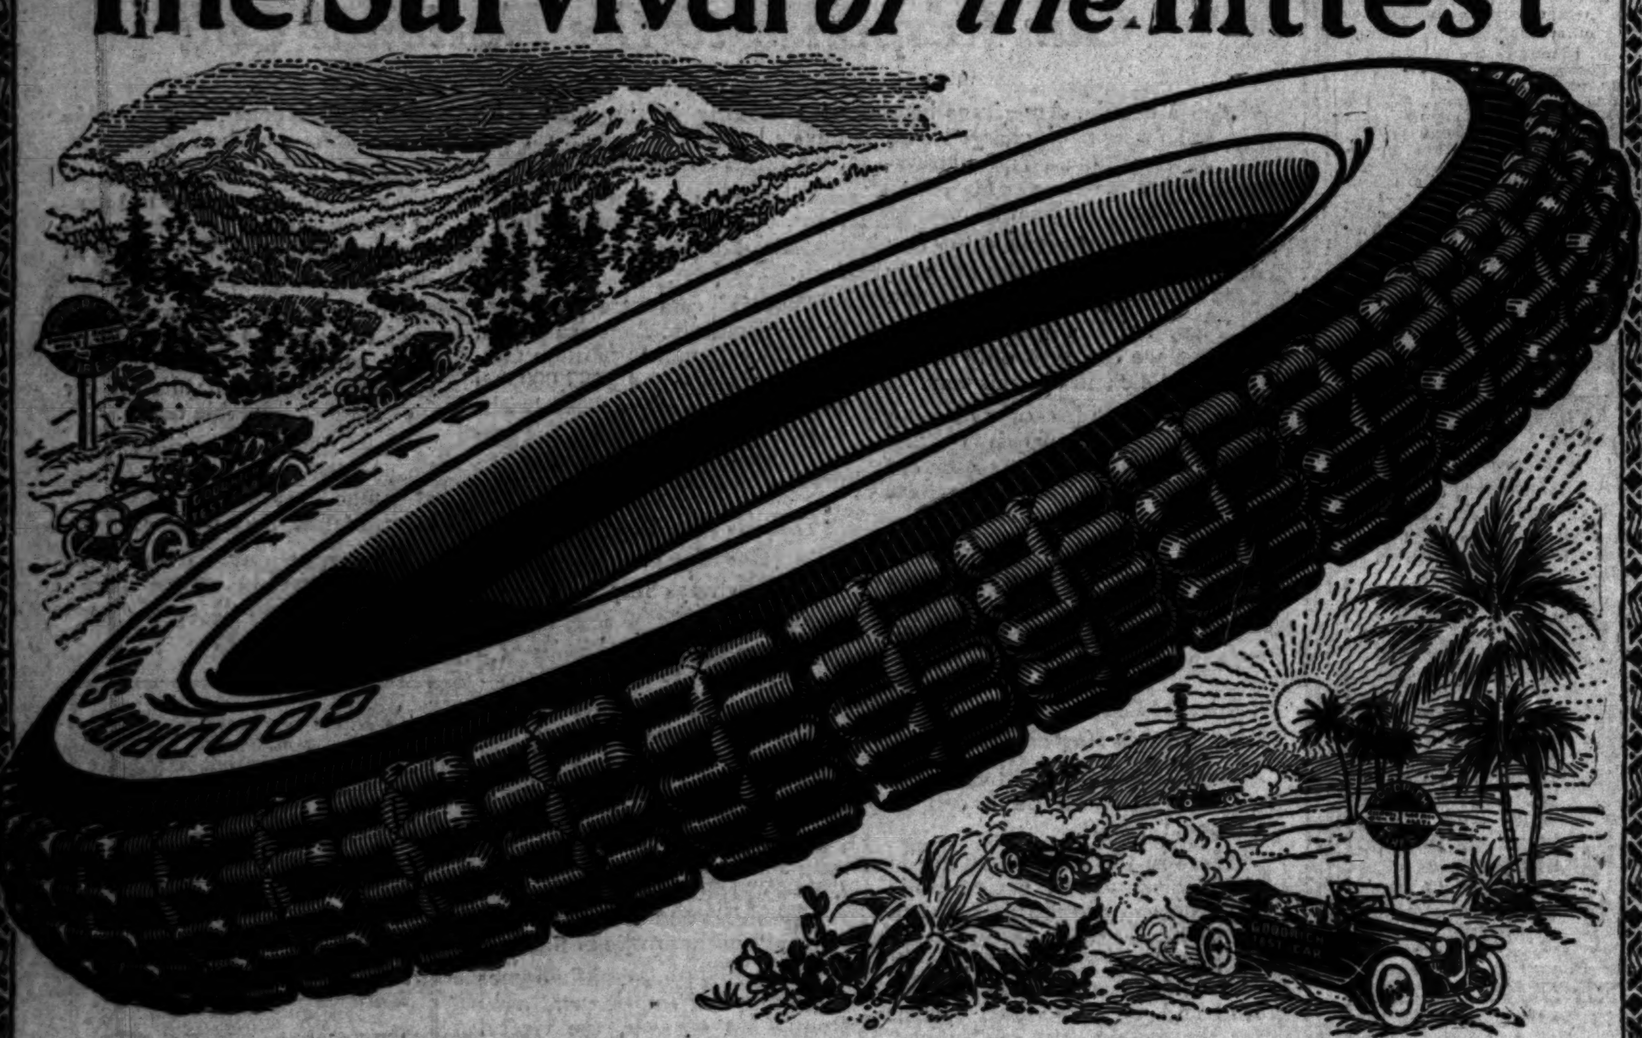
The Survival of the Fittest



GOODRICH

BLACK SAFETY TREAD TIRES

EVOLUTION climbs on the bones of the weak. Only THE STRONG, THE BEST, survive the TEST. As true of TIRES as of cave men.

Goodrich Black Safety Treads are the FIT fabric tires that have survived the relentless TEST of the Goodrich Test Car Fleet.

To produce them hundreds of tires have been worn to the quick over millions of miles of the worst roads of America.

Goodrich never sells you an experiment. Be it a Goodrich rubber mat, a garden hose, or a Goodrich tire, it must prove itself by wear and tear test worthy of the Goodrich name.

A cruel test of tires—that test of Goodrich's Test Car Fleets.

Tested The Country Over

Six corps of heavy cars, light cars, hard running cars—take Goodrich Tires and maul their MERIT against teeth of sand, rock, and gravel. Two sets of drivers, speeding them sixteen hours a day, hammer them week after week on the anvil of the road.

Wherever climate and roads can test and tell something about tires, a Goodrich Test Car Fleet is grinding the TRUTH out of Goodrich tires.

While the Atlantic Fleet crunches through the hills and valleys of New York and New England, the Pacific Fleet hammers the granite highways of the Western coast.

While the Dixie Fleet braves the sun of the South, the Lake Fleet ploughs the sand stretches of Minnesota.

While the Prairie Fleet scours the roads around Kansas City, the Mountain Fleet battles the rocky trails of Yellowstone and Glacier Parks.

Throughout miles of roughing it, which run into millions, over roads which cross-hatch the map of the United States, Goodrich learns the TESTED VIRTUES of its tires.

Thus it settles the durability and resilience of the UNIT MOLDED TIRE—the unbroken curing Goodrich has always maintained was the BEST construction for fabric tires. Thus it settles the wearing strength of Black Tread, the toughest rubber known.

ALL THIS IS THE BEST IN TIRES BECAUSE IT HAS SURVIVED THE TEST.

Ford Car Tires of Heroic Size GOODRICH "Three-Seventy-Five"

The tire sensation of 1917; made exclusively by Goodrich; designed expressly for Ford Cars, is a burly tire, 31x3¾ in.; built in Safety Tread only, to fit 30-inch rims.

Its extra rubber and fabric means less stress and strain on the tire and your car, hence ECONOMY, in longer-lived tires and longer-lived cars.

These handsome tires, at little more cost, make a DE LUXE FORD CAR.

Best in the Long Run

HERE'S A CONTEST WHERE DRIVERS WILL "COAST" DOWN EVERY HILL

Speed doesn't count in this race.

Edward W. Masterson and Mark Erwin, Camp Curry (Yosemite) managers, and the cups that are to be awarded in the economy run from Los Angeles for local automobile dealers, are shown above. This run will be a practical test of the claims of the dealers that "their" car uses but little gasoline.

THE first automobile contest announced for the summer season in Southern California 's an economy run from Los Angeles to the Yosemite, under the auspices of Camp Curry, the well known resort in that wonderland. Open to Los Angeles dealers of regularly manufactured motor cars, it will be for economy in fuel, and if the rules prepared offer any criterion it will be one of the most exacting events of its kind ever held in the Southland, or probably in the State.

The entries will be divided into three classes, with a silver loving cup as a prize for the winner in each class. The crews of each car while in the National park will be the guests of Camp Curry. The variety of roads between Los Angeles and the Yosemite, with grades as high as 14 per cent., will present a real test in this most important feature in the automobile world. And today sensible economy has almost become a watchword.

RULES.

Entries are to be made to Mack Erwin, Los Angeles manager for Camp Curry, No. 604 South Spring street, on regularly prepared blanks and must be in that office not later than June 17. Maps of the road, which will be by way of Fresno, Merced and Mariposa, and which show accurate mileage and percentage of grades, may be secured there.

The three classes of entries are divided as follows: First, four and six-cylinder cars, 1917 models, price $1000 and under, factory. Second, four, six and eight-cylinder cars, 1917 model, price not more than $2000 and not less than $1001, factory. Three, four, six, eight and twelve-cylinder cars, 1917 model, price $2000 and over, factory.

Economy will be determined by piston displacement and weight of car, and no entry fee will be charged.

Cars are to start at one-minute intervals, in the order of the receipt of their entry. The first day's run will be to Fresno, where a night control will be established. Cars will leave there at the same interval and in order of their arrival at the control, for second day's run to Camp Curry. On arrival at Camp Curry cars will go into final control until released by the judges.

During the time cars are in control gas tanks may not be opened, under penalty of instant disqualification, except by duly appointed officials.

TIME.

Each contestant shall come to the starting point in Los Angeles at least one hour before the time of starting the first car and then shall have the gas tank of his car drained by an inspector and by him refilled with gasoline, to capacity. The gasoline is to be furnished by the promotor and paid for at the time by the contestant at the prevailing market price.

Each car shall carry a five-gallon container, duly certified, as to accuracy by the City and County Sealer of Weights and Measures, and shall carry his certificate so stating. Said container shall be paid for at time by contestant at cost to promotor, plus cost of certification if any.

Each car shall be regular stock model in every particular as sold to the general public and shall carry full touring equipment including top, either raised or lowered, and at least one extra tire. No additions, such as taping of gas line, will be permitted.

The promoter shall have on hand at the start the same number of duly qualified observers as there are cars entered and as each car is called to the line, an observer shall by chosen by lot to ride in it for the first day's run.

SECOND DAY.

At the beginning of the second day's run this system shall again be followed, save that in case an observer is chosen by lot

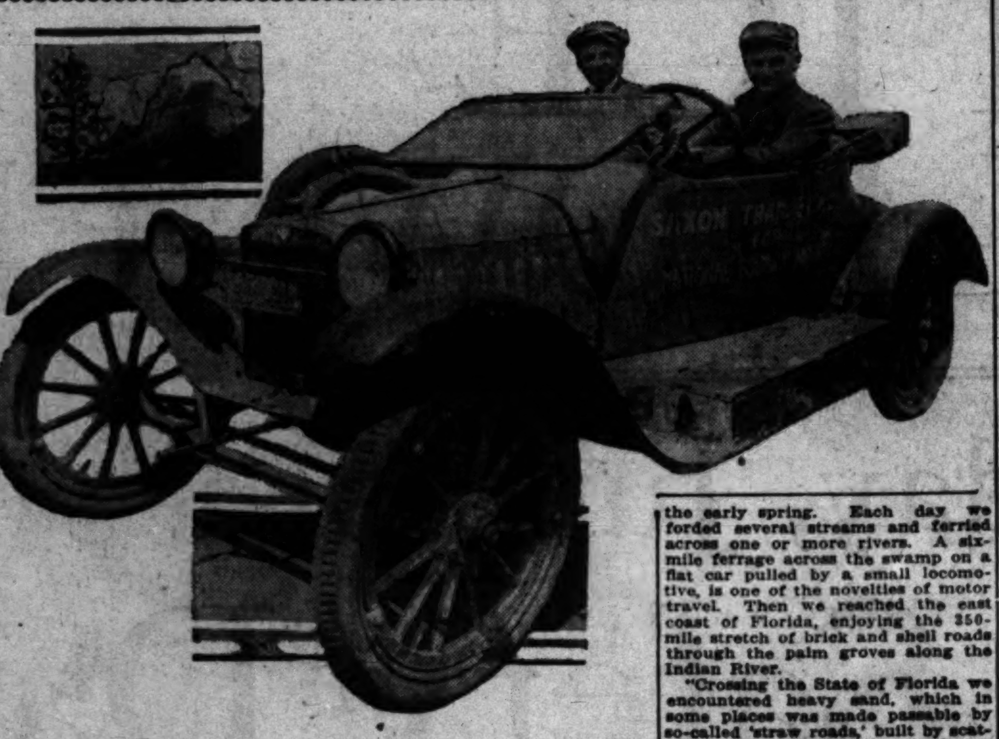
THIS MACHINE FOLLOWS KINKS AND CURVES ALONG THE BORDER.



'A big little car—the boundary trail blazer.

This is the famous trail blazer, a Saxon four, that has already made the trip along the southern border, and now is en route for the Canadian border. The trip will be complete when the Saxon returns to the starting point in the East, after circling the United States. You can rest assured that this car has ploughed through some roads that are not worthy of the name, but just now, while passing through California, the two men who are making the trip are having an easy time of it, hitting 'er up on high all the way.

"IN FOLLOWING the kinks and curves of the United States boundary from Washington to Los Angeles, our Saxon trail blazer for the national boundary highway has experienced a variety of road conditions not to be encountered on a cross-continental tour. On such a trip the motorist who enjoys the thrill of putting his car through the roadability test, will find his paradise, and each day's travel will present new motoring conditions that will enrich his fund of motor lore," said A. W. Schlabach, Saxon factory highway draftsman, to J. V. Baldwin, Southern California Saxon distributor.

After having skirted the Mexican boundary line, the blazer hit for Los Angeles. Upon arrival in this city the famous little car was placed on display in the J. V. Baldwin Motor Company's show room.

"Leaving Washington on March 6, we blazed through the pine hills of old Virginia over heavy clay roads, which a month of rain had rendered almost impassable. Whenever possible we left the road threading our way through the pine woods, clearing the brush with an axe as we went. On through the Carolinas we worked our way, finding the road a sandy composition and a little easier to travel over," said Schlabach.

NOVELTIES.

"The coast of Georgia offered novelties in the way of antiquated corduroy roads over woodland swamps and occasional plunges through roads submerged by the tide. Mud and washouts of all descriptions were provided by Dame Nature for the southeastern coast in the early spring. Each day we forded several streams and ferried across one or more rivers. A six-mile ferrage across the swamp on a flat car pulled by a small locomotive, is one of the novelties of motor travel. Then we reached the east coast of Florida, enjoying the 350-mile stretch of brick and shell roads through the palm groves along the Indian River.

"Crossing the State of Florida we encountered heavy sand, which in some places was made passable by so-called 'straw roads,' built by scattering pine needles in the wheel ruts. Between Pensacola and New Orleans the many ferries carried the Saxon roadster through the bayous of the gulf river. Some of these old-fashioned ferries are extensive undertakings and require two hours or more in navigating the winding bayous.

FOLLOW LEVEES.

"In Louisiana we found that the automobile roads follow the levees as the river bank is the high land in the Mississippi Delta State. In Texas we drove over miles of cattle range where the ranchers refer to the highways as lanes. Opening the gates every few miles becomes a tiresome job before the day is done. For roughness the road following the Rio Grande River from Brownsville to Del Rio through the light alluvial dust surpasses anything we have yet experienced.

"After crossing the desert and mountains it is a pleasure to blaze our trail over the splendid highways of Southern California. Without a doubt the California boulevards are the best we have traversed since leaving Washington, D. C.

"From Los Angeles we will follow the valley route to San Francisco and from that city direct to Portland and Seattle. The jaunt will come to a close during the fall months," concluded Mr. Schlabach.

IF "GAS" PRICE GOES UP WHY NOT USE ELECTRICITY?

IF THE PRICE of gasoline begins to soar, as has been predicted, R. B. MacIntosh, manager of the local branch of the Owen Magnetic Sales Corporation, distributors of Rauch & Lang electrics, believes electricity will be the answer.

"It is but logical," he asserts, "that with the tremendously-increased demand for gasoline and its consequent scarcity, the public will turn more and more to the economical and efficient electric pleasure and commercial vehicle for its urban service.

"Great Britain, France, Russia—all now depend to a great extent upon the United States for their oil supply. It means in short, a 40 per cent. possible increase in supply and an 800 per cent. increase in demand. Military necessity must not be disregarded.

"It is not unreasonable, therefore," claims Mr. MacIntosh, "to assume that here at home we shall turn to electricity as a satisfactory solution of the problem.

"Electricity rates have been reduced in this city to a level rendering the electric vehicle the most economical medium of transportation extant.

"I believe patriotic individuals will feel bound in duty to provide, as a part of their 'bit,' for all possible gasoline to supply military needs at the front. And, doing this, they will not have sacrificed the pleasure and convenience of the automobile—they will still have the quiet, serviceable and economical electric to answer their every requirement.

"The Rauch & Lang," he concludes, "being the best known in this field, is preparing to meet the increased demand, which already is being felt throughout the country. The new models are especially popular, owing to their increased mileage and speed."

AUTO SHOW MAY BE HELD IN BILLY SUNDAY TABERNACLE.

ACCORDING to Harris M. Hanshue, secretary of the organization, the Los Angeles Motor Car Dealers' Association already has begun to give some thought to the subject of the annual show. It is presumed that the show will be held in the fall, as has been the custom for two years, and the chief concern is about a proper location.

It has been suggested as feasible, said Mr. Hanshue, to enter into some kind of an arrangement with the committee in charge of the Billy Sunday meeting. This committee proposes to build some sort of an auditorium in which the evangelist will conduct his services. It might be that the dealer could induce the committee to begin its work a little earlier than at present contemplated and the structure be up in time to house a motor car show. The only objection to using it following the religious gatherings is because these are scheduled for so late in the season.

Mr. Hanshue is Pacific Coast representative for Apperson Bros. Automobile Company and a few days ago left for San Francisco to visit that branch. Before departing, though, he discussed the subject of a used car show to be conducted under the auspices of the dealers' association. He cited the fact that shows of this nature have been held in Chicago, Denver, Grand Rapids and St. Louis and he believes what has been done elsewhere toward alleviating the condition of the used car market can be done with improvement in Los Angeles.

The report of the Chicago show was made public only a few days ago and it indicates that although the total attendance was only slightly in excess of $25,000, the business done on the floor of the show resulted in the sale of 216 cars of a value of $170,161. The stimulation spread to the salesrooms and 113 used cars were sold in the usual places of business while the show was on. New car business also was helped and forty were sold so that a total of $275,825 worth of business was attributed direct to the used car show. In addition, the dealers' association profited to the extent of almost $5000 from the income of the show itself.

COLOR BLENDING REQUIRES EXPERT.

"The combining of pleasing and time-proof colors in motor cars, both upholstery and painting, is not as simple as it seems," said George R. Bentel, head of the Grand-avenue plant bearing his name and Pacific Coast distributor for the Mercer and Jordan cars. It has been the Bentel policy to paint the Mercer and Jordan cars to meet the individual tastes of each purchaser, the autos being received from the factory in a priming coat of lead.

"For instance, turquoise and pink would set each other off to perfection, but think of the effect on traffic. Another extreme would be gray and brown. But our color designers would not think of putting them together on a car.

"Colors which not only balance but really enhance each other must be used. Each hue must be in harmony with all of the others. Vibrant colors which clash must be kept far away from each other. The chromatic chart is a guide generally, but beauty in a paint job is really a study.

"Colors closer together in the chromatic scale detract from each other. Thus we strive to use colors which are complements to each other. These are the hues the farthest from each other on the chromatic scale.

"Then we have the neutrals. Putting red and gray together has a peculiar effect upon the latter. The red looks natural enough, but the gray becomes greenish.

Red Cross nurses were stationed in the various departments of the great motor car plant to receive memberships and issue receipts for contributions. The full factory force responded generously to this Red Cross appeal, many workers giving as high as $5 each to the fund.

One of the most interesting features in connection with the demonstration was the knowledge that the details of the big rally were arranged entirely by the young women employed in the top factory. Factory officials were not aware of the rally until permission was asked of them for a short extension of the noon hour, that the complete programme scheduled might be enacted. The American flag, around which the demonstration centered, was the work of a nimble-fingered top-maker and was made from material bought with funds raised by popular subscription among the girls. Three hundred employees contributed 5 cents each for the bunting necessary to make the huge national emblem.

HOW LONG WOULD IT TAKE TO MOTOR TO MILKY WAY.

"HOW long would it take to reach the Milky Way if a Detroiter 6-45 travels fifty miles an hour?"

The man who addressed this query to Harry C. Turner of the Turner-Whitford Company, distributor in Southern California for the Detroiter, may have intended it as a joke, and again he may not.

But considering the possibility that the inquiry was made in all seriousness, and that the Detroiter could travel toward the Milky Way, Turner who is a member of the B.A.A.E. and of a mathematical turn of mind, declares an answer is possible. In spite of the wonderful staying powers of some of our most expert drivers, it is doubtful if they could stay at the wheel throughout the extended journey through the universe. Again even a car like the Detroiter might need gas and oil at certain intervals. Nevertheless the problem is subject to fairly accurate computation. From scientific data available the stars of the Milky Way are from 100,000 to 200,000 times farther from the earth than the sun. Scientists tell us that the sun is 92,000,000 miles away. As a basis upon which to figure it may be assumed that the Milky Way is 15,000 times farther away. Consequently the Detroiter has a journey of 13,920,000,000,000 miles.

After using a bale of paper and employing a system known only to the most expert mathematicians, Turner stated that the Detroiter could negotiate the distance in just 3,339,953 years, 113 days and 8 hours. Despite the high standard of the Detroiter he refused to guarantee it for the trip.

If the same amount of time were consumed in returning, Turner believes that there would be some few changes in models before the Detroiter had checked in at the starting point.

Economy is a Factor

ECONOMY is simply wise buying.

It does not mean unnecessary sacrifice.

Economy is the very opposite of hoarding.

For the very term "economy" presupposes the purchase of necessities, of conveniences, of those things that make for business and personal efficiency.

Automobiles are necessities with many of us—professional men find them well-nigh indispensable.

Salesmen in various lines of business often find their efficiency greatly enhanced by the use of a motor car.

To the family it means health, strength and added vigor—it means increased happiness.

Anything that means all this is an economy.

Therefore, the question is one of what automobile to buy.

Studebaker is the largest producer of fine automobiles in the world.

Studebaker's great resources, Studebaker's great volume enable Studebaker to produce a better car at a lower price.

For this reason Studebaker cars are probably the greatest values on the automobile market today, dollar for dollar of their prices.

The Studebaker FOUR is the only 40 Horse Power, Four Cylinder, Seven Passenger car selling for less than $1,000.

The Studebaker SIX is the only 50 Horse Power, Six Cylinder, Seven Passenger car selling for less than $1,500.

In ratio to power Studebaker cars are very economical in their consumption of gasoline.

In ratio to weight and carrying capacity, they are very economical in tires—Studebaker owners frequently get from 8,000 to 10,000 miles on a single set of tires.

Studied accessibility reduces adjustment and repair costs to a minimum.

Studebaker's nation-wide organization of thirty-two direct branches and 6,500 dealers, assures your permanent service satisfaction.

Therefore, economy being a factor—if you want to buy wisely and well, it will pay you to investigate Studebaker before you decide what car to buy.

CHESS.

GAME NO. 50—PETROFF'S DEFENSE TRANSPOSING INTO FOUR KNIGHTS' GAME

Chess being a little dull during the summer, I am obliged to unearth a couple of old games of my own to keep things moving. The following was an off-hand game, played October 10, 1915.

White—H. Yourstone	Black—S. Miotkowski
1—P-K4	P-K4
2—Kt-KB3	Kt-KB3
3—Kt-B3	Kt-B3—a
4—P-Q4—b	B-Kt5—c
5—Q-Q3—d	PxP
6—KtxP	Castles
7—KtxKt	KtPxKt—e
8—B-Q2—f	BxKt
9—BxB	KtxP
10—Castles	KtxB—g
11—QxKt	R-Kt1
12—P-KR4	R-Kt3—h
13—B-Q3	P-Q4
14—P-R5	Q-Kt4 ch
15—K-Kt1	P-KB3
16—P-R3	R-K3
17—P-KKt4	R3—Kt1
18—P-Kt3	Q-B5
19—R-K3	P-B3
20—R-Q4	Q-Q3
21—R-R4	P-QB4—i
22—RxP	P-B5
23—Q-R5	P-Q5
24—R—R8—j	RxR
25—RxR ch	P-Q6
26—PxP	PxKtP
27—P-R3	Q-B8
28—R-QB1—k	QxR ch
29—KxQ	P-Kt7 ch
30—K-Kt1—l	R-R7 ch and wins.

a—B-Kt5 is now generally looked upon as giving Black a rather easier defense.

b—B-Kt5 is the most cramping move here and the one usually played. If Black replies B-Kt5, we have the Double Ruy Lopez, a position apparently symmetrically equal, but one in which White's advantage of the first move makes Black's game extremely difficult.

c—Black may also play PxP, when we have by transposition a position in the Scotch Game.

d—P-Q3 is the usual move, or KtxKP.

e—It is not good to retake with the Queen's Pawn in such a position as White by exchanging Queens would have four Pawns to three on the King's side, whereas though Black has four Pawns to three on the Queen's side, one of them is doubled. This is the kind of game that Lasker often plays for in the Ruy. He gets his Pawn to QB4 and advances his Queen's Knight Pawn one square, leaving the QBP at its original square. Then the four Pawns cannot break through the three, as an examination will show, where they can on the other side.

f—This loses a Pawn. White probably feared to lose further time by, say, P-R3.

g—KtxBP would be answered by Q-Kt3, winning a piece.

h—Apparently an awkward maneuver. Black's idea was not only to allow of the safe advance of the Queen's Pawn, but eventually to double Rooks.

i—Preferring to relinquish the Pawn rather than to defend it. As White's Rook gets out of play a rapid attack offers good prospects of success.

j—White wishes to exchange his Rook, which cannot do much at R7, for one of the opposing Rooks doubled on the open file and ready for the onslaught.

k—In anwer to either Q-Q2 or B-Q1, P-Kt7, wins.

l—A little worse than KQ2, but of course the game is lost.

AUTO CLUB WANTS "JITS" REGULATED.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE DIRECTORS.

Arguments Advanced in Favor of Initiative Measure Number Four—Many Large Cities on Coast Already Have Ordinances to Control Nickel Chasers.

The Automobile Club of Southern California has passed a resolution calling on all members of the organization to vote for regulation of the jitney bus at the June 5 election and approving proposition No. 4 on the ballot.

A copy of the resolution has been mailed to all members of the Automobile Club registered in Los Angeles. In transmitting the resolution Standish L. Mitchell said:

"The directors of the club were unanimous in their opinion that any regulation of this nature that would have a tendency to relieve the now seriously congested condition of the business district is entirely desirable."

The resolution follows:

"Whereas, an initiative measure will be submitted to the people of the city of Los Angeles at the election it be held June 5 next, and known as No. 4 on the ballot, and designated 'An ordinance providing for the supervision and regulation of the transportation of persons for compensation over public streets in the city of Los Angeles by automobiles, jitney busses, stages and auto stages; providing for the issue of permits for the operation of such automobiles, jitney busses, stages and auto stages upon certain streets; and providing for the punishment of violations of this ordinance;' and, whereas, a condition has arisen in the congested business district of the city by reason of the indiscriminate and unregulated operation of jitney busses, thereby causing serious delays to business, interrupting traffic and menacing life and property; and, whereas, the proposed city ordinance provides a proper regulation of all jitney busses and also prescribes a zone, bounded by First street on the north, Main street on the east, Eighth street on the south, and Hill street on the west, in which jitney busses shall not be allowed to operate, thereby relieving the crowded business district from undue congestion; and, whereas, such regulation of the jitney busses exists today in San Francisco, Oakland, San Diego, Fresno, Bakersfield, Long Beach and other cities, and the plan has proven successful in every respect; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, that the Automobile Club of Southern California indorses the said initiative measure, known as No. 4 on the ballot, and this organization recommends this measure to the favorable consideration of its members and to the voters of Los Angeles.

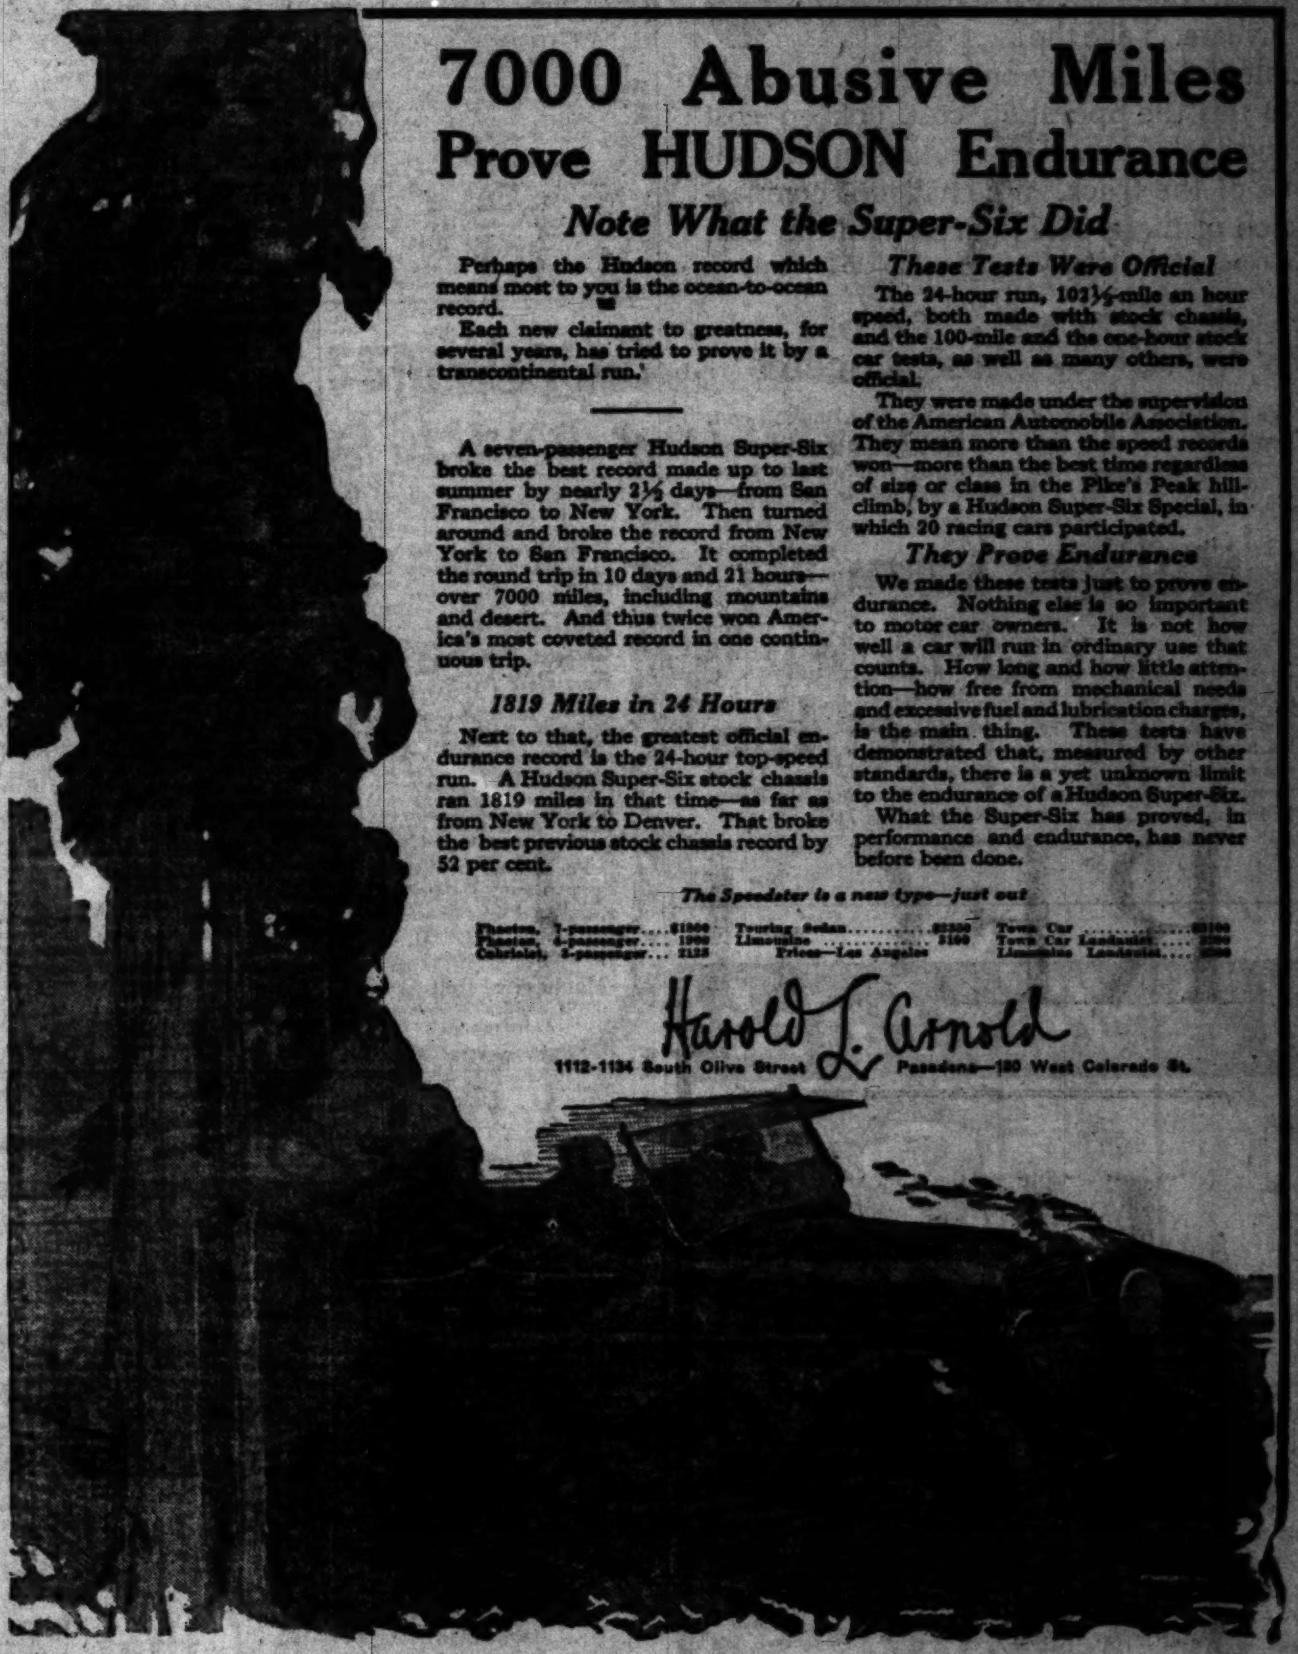
Stars and Stripes sent by college boys.

Before the final arrangements were made for the early closing of the northern universities, that those students who desired to join the naval military forces of the country could do so at an early date, the student body of the Leland Stanford University purchased the color standard of the country with the idea in mind of presenting it to the American heroes on the battle-front somewhere in France. It was deemed advisable not to intrust delivery of this flag to the common carrier. A selection was made by the student body of a man in whom they had sufficient confidence for the safe delivery of Old Glory to the American Legion across the water. This honor fell to L. R. Skelton, a senior of the university, son of Dr. L. S. Skelton of Oklahoma, the man whose money has made possible the wonderful success of the Leach Motor Car Company of this city. After being driven to the railroad station in a Liberty car, Skeleton said, "I know of no more fitting farewell to Old Glory than that bidden from a Liberty car, and it is with sincere regret indeed that I leave your sunny Southern California, but with the promised excitement across the water, the days fairly drag between now and the time that I will deliver into the happy hands of those waiting soldiers, this emblem of Old Glory. You Americans who have been away from your native soil can well appreciate the feeling that will arise in those brave soldiers' hearts at the sight of the flag of their native land."



7000 Abusive Miles Prove HUDSON Endurance

Note What the Super-Six Did

Perhaps the Hudson record which means most to you is the ocean-to-ocean record.

Each new claimant to greatness, for several years, has tried to prove it by a transcontinental run.

A seven-passenger Hudson Super-Six broke the best record made up to last summer by nearly 2½ days—from San Francisco to New York. Then turned around and broke the record from New York to San Francisco. It completed the round trip in 10 days and 21 hours—over 7000 miles, including mountains and desert. And thus twice won America's most coveted record in one continuous trip.

1819 Miles in 24 Hours

Next to that, the greatest official endurance record is the 24-hour top-speed run. A Hudson Super-Six stock chassis ran 1819 miles in that time—as far as from New York to Denver. That broke the best previous stock chassis record by 52 per cent.

These Tests Were Official

The 24-hour run, 102½-mile an hour speed, both made with stock chassis, and the 100-mile and the one-hour stock car tests, as well as many others, were official.

They were made under the supervision of the American Automobile Association. They mean more than the speed records won—more than the best time regardless of size or class in the Pike's Peak hill-climb, by a Hudson Super-Six Special, in which 20 racing cars participated.

They Prove Endurance

We made these tests just to prove endurance. Nothing else is so important to motor car owners. It is not how well a car will run in ordinary use that counts. How long and how little attention—how free from mechanical needs and excessive fuel and lubrication charges, is the main thing. These tests have demonstrated that, measured by other standards, there is a yet unknown limit to the endurance of a Hudson Super-Six.

What the Super-Six has proved, in performance and endurance, has never before been done.

Cotton Fabric — Like Steel, Gets Tired

COTTON fabric is to a tire what steel is to a modern structure — the very backbone. Steel will crystallize in service and give way if improperly treated in the making — Just so will the life-giving wax and oil found in native cotton CARBONIZE if subjected to excessive heat in the vulcanizing pits.

The Miller Method of vulcanizing tires retains all the native wax and oil found in cotton. It preserves the natural strength and elasticity of the rubber for wear on your car.

Miller Geared-to-the-Road Tires come from the vulcanizing pits lusty with vigor. They are sturdy long distance travelers—and brimful of mile-muscle.

And this sturdy carcass is a fit foundation for the rugged Miller geared-to-the-road tread — the tread that gears your car safely over wet, slippery pavements.

Equip with Miller tires today and put skid fear and tire troubles out of your mind forever.

GLEICHMANN IS RELEASED.

Gus Gleichmann, less than three months ago heralded as the "$10,000 first baseman," yesterday was handed his unconditional release by the Los Angeles club.

The action followed a conference between Powers and Chance soon after the latter's return from Chicago. The step was taken in order to make room for Jack Fournier. That Gleichmann will succeed in getting on with some club in the East there is little doubt.

Powers says baseball conditions are satisfactory in the East aside from the weather. Both major leagues and all the big minors will go through the season in good shape, he asserts.

RAPIDLY CATCHING UP WITH TRIS SPEAKER.

Latest Averages Show Jack Smith of St. Louis Again Leading the National League Hitters, with Mann and Groh Making Most Runs in Older Organization.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

CHICAGO, June 2.—Jack Smith, St. Louis, again is showing the way to National League batters, according to unofficial averages released today. Smith is out in front with an average of .365.

Mann, Chicago, and Groh, Cincinnati, become the leaders in runs scored, each having crossed the plate twenty-four times. Zeider, Chicago, tops the base stealers with ten. The averages include games of last Wednesday.

"Stuffy" McInnis, Philadelphia, is creeping up on Tris Speaker for batting honors in the American League, eight points separating them. Speaker's average is .346.

Chapman, Cleveland, maintains his position as the leading sacrifice hitter and base stealer, having twenty-five sacrifice hits to his credit and thirteen stolen bases. Ty Cobb has stolen ten bases. Boston is leading in team batting with an average of .249.

TIGERS CLIMB OUT OF CELLAR.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PORTLAND (Or.) June 2.—Vernon climbed out of the cellar today by defeating Portland again. Portland led until the sixth, when Helfrich blew up, following a home run by McLarry. Five hits and a walk netted four runs and three more scored in the seventh. Score:

ARROYO SECO IS BASEBALL WINNER.

The Arroyo Seco intermediate ball players trimmed the Echo Park team of the same division in a hot game yesterday morning by the score of 5 to 2. The game was a pitchers' battle between Peters of the winners and Haight for the losers. Peters allowed only two hits and fanned twelve men, while Haight fanned ten and allowed six hits.

Stuffy McInnis, some slugger.

The tremendous hitting of Connie Mack's first baseman is rapidly shooting him to the top of the American League hitters. At present he is only a very few points below Tris Speaker and is climbing very fast.

a pound on each side of his face. Wolverton also appeared to be overweight in the face. This, however, was an optical illusion, being due to a couple of ulcerated teeth. Today he will play a double-header with the dentist and have both of them pulled out by the roots. He will then reform and change his brand of chewing tobacco. Hereafter he will use fine cut, which comes under the head of liquid nourishment, and imposes no great strain on the teeth. That is, for breakfast. Later in the day he will partake of a heavier meal composed of horse plug.

SOCIETY NOTE:

Charley Pike, who recently received a consignment of pure maple sugar and syrup from his boyhood home in Vermont, was at the park passing out large lumps to his friends. Today he intends to bring out a can of syrup and treat his friends and admirers between innings. It is in the nature of a box party, and the can will be placed within easy reach of all. A pleasant time is anticipated.

Maggert started the doings propitiously with a smash to right in the first. By traveling the last twenty feet on his stomach, he stretched it into a triple. Maggert does this so much that he should wear a pair of roller skates on his wishbone. This would lessen the wear and tear of sliding. Baum then rallied and struck out Vaughn. Pick snatched up a cannon shot by Kenworthy with his bare hand. This so jarred his arm that he threw low to the plate, and Maggert completed the tally on his diaphragm.

San Francisco tied it in the second on a walk, a sacrifice and Koerner's single, but not for long, as the Angels scored twice in the same inning. Baum hit Killifer, who was forced by Bassler. Johnny took second on an out by Ellis. Zeb then appeared at the plate, and the terrific applause rocked him down to his foundations. He was able to steady himself sufficiently to walk to first on four wide ones. Hogg did much to win his own game with a prolific double to left that scored both men. Maggert lined to Schaller.

The Angels completed the enterprise in the fifth. Maggert opened with a single, and the team batted straight through. Vaughn sacrificed, and Kenworthy knocked a single to left, Maggert scoring on his feet. Meusel beat out an infield hit, and Killifer forced Bill at third, unassisted. Pick then tried to double Red, but couldn't. Meusel advanced from first to third on the play, beating Koerner's return. You've got to hand it to Meusel. He does not play ball with his head in the sand, like an ostrich, but holds it up the same as a giraffe. This enables him to see life's opportunities on the bases. Irish scored on a two-ply steal. Bassler singled Kenworthy across, and rode home on a double by Ellis. Terry walked again. He will not do any running until he becomes acclimated. Baum and Koerner placed the soft pedal on Hogg.

Singles by Koerner and Corhan put hostile runners on first and third with nobody demised in the seventh. Baker suicided on three strikes. Calvo, batting for Vaughn, flied to Maggert, Beef scoring. Corhan completed the circuit on Fitzgerald's hit. Pick then busted a long one to right. The ball rolled inside the iron roller reposing there. The ball was extracted with difficulty. Meusel was at first tempted to hitch himself to the roller, gallop in with it and in that way cut Pick off at the plate. On second thought, he crawled inside the roller and got the ball in time to hold Pick at third. Pick stuck there when Maisel flied to Maggert for the third out. It might be just as well hereafter to leave the heavy machinery outside the park. Steam rollers, threshing machines, rock crushers and other implements tend to interfere with the otherwise skillful work of our outfielders. The only thing that prevented Boss Wolverton from getting a pinch hit in the ninth was a flossy assist by Zeb. The score:

SOME RANDOM REMARKS.

*BY HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

IS THE war a sporting proposition? We would opine that it is as far as the United States is concerned. Otherwise, how are we to account for the large number of athletes—especially college athletes—suddenly taking up farming so that the army can eat.

These men did not wait to be called or urged. They voluntarily rallied round the ranch-house. It was not necessary to conscript them for the farm. They volunteered to go out and saw wood or make hay, as the occasion required. The prospect of raising stuff to feed the soldiers on the firing line struck a popular chord with the athletes, stirring their sporting instincts and arousing that fighting spirit which prompts a man to get out and hoe corn. These patriotic impulses prompted them to cut short their college careers, and take up farming. True, there were some short-sighted athletes, who did not appreciate the importance of raising garden truck and cereals, and enlisted in the army where there is nothing to do but fight. These, it is believed, were in the minority.

Those of us who have stood on the side lines and cheered the gridiron gladiators and the track stars, realized that they would be the hope of the nation in case of war. Their courage could not be doubted, and it has been proven by their willingness to callous their hands doing chores. For a time after war was declared there was talk of abolishing college athletics. This would have been a grave mistake. Only by perpetuating athletics can the required number of farm hands be produced. Many of these will be killed off by hard work, and their places must be filled.

The government cannot do less than provide pensions for college athletes who are maimed while raising stuff with which to feed the troops in the first line trenches.

Among professional athletes the back-to-the-soil movement has not been so general. This may be partly due to the fact that professionals get better pay than college athletes. They could hardly afford to throw up their jobs. At least, they would rather take their chances with conscription than relinquish their salaries.

Frankly, when it comes to a showdown, the percentage of would-be slackers among athletes, either professional or amateur, will not be found bigger than among any other class, if as large. Long before this country was involved, and when the war was yet young, scores of college men and professional boxers, ball players, oarsmen, track men and others enlisted with one or the other of the Entente Allies. It is significant that none of these, as far as known, offered his services to the Kaiser. This brings us back to the sporting proposition. These fellows got a hunch that Wilhelm wasn't playing the game according to the rules.

Those who have studied a crowd at a baseball game or boxing contest, will get the angle of the average American mind. Let one of the boxers commit an intentional foul, or one of the players deliberately spike an opponent, and even though he may have been an idol, he finds himself instantly in disfavor. This was a bit of psychological study that the Kaiser overlooked. This country is arrayed against him today because the real American cherishes a high standard of fair play, and is quick to resent what is expressed in the parlance of sport as "dirty work." This instinct may not have been developed by sports, but it finds its surest expression in the attitude of the average crowd which patronizes sports.

Then there is another analogy between sports and this country's attitude toward the Kaiser. No good sport returning from his daily ball game is going to stand around with his hands in his pockets while some big bully beats up a child or kicks out its brains. By the same token the average American can't get accustomed to the wanton murder of women and children. And Americans are of all descents and mixtures—Irish, German, Welsh, Scotch, English and what not. Blended into one, they emerge from the melting pot with the big idea—"fair play." And as we understand it, this isn't a war of races or of nations, but a war of ideas, and the Kaiser's idea didn't dovetail with the ideas of the greatest sporting nation in the world.

It's a cinch that the gang which won't stand for a blow below the belt in the prize ring, won't stand for the murder of a mother or the rape of a daughter or sister, and it doesn't have to be his mother, sister or daughter either to start him fighting.

That's why Uncle Sam got in the game, if you are looking for the real reason.

OLD-TIME TIRE MEN OPEN STORE.

The Cleveland Standard Tire and Rubber Company, Inc., of Los Angeles, recently opened their new store at Pico and Hill streets. The company's officers are Harry M. Lieb, president; E. Bruce Conlee, vice-president and general manager; E. Leon Sprague, secretary. Mr. Conlee and Mr. Sprague have been connected with the tire game in Los Angeles for the past four years, and are experienced men. They formerly were with the Miller Rubber Company.

The company acts as Southern California distributors for Cleveland Standard and Velvet Tread tires, manufactured by the Standard Tire and Rubber Manufacturing Company of Cleveland, O., an organization comprising former factory executives of six leading tire companies, and their manufacturing methods are the latest and best known to the industry.

AUTOISTS TELL OF GOOD ROADS.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, June 1.—Gordon Donald and William Frizzell, who left this city three weeks ago on an automobile trip to Sycamore, Kan., returned today and reported that the transcontinental highways are in fair shape although the continued cold weather has prevented road crews from doing much work on them. They went from here to Syracuse over the National Old Trails, from there to Salt Lake over the Lincoln Highway and from Salt Lake to Redlands over the Arrowhead Trail.

They said that the Arrowhead Trail is in better shape than any other road and that the road from Las Vegas, Nev., to Redlands is especially good. They found the road from Williams to the Grand Canyon also good. From Syracuse they went to La Junta and Denver, being held up one day by a snowstorm. From Cheyenne they went to Salt Lake and this was the worst piece of road they encountered on the long trip. They stopped but four days on the trip, slept in the car and cooked their meals. The travel is fairly heavy now and about thirty cars a day pass over the National Old Trails. Utah, they say, is a prosperous looking country and the crops are heavy there.

GROWING COMPANY OPENS NEW BRANCH.

The Los Angeles Auto Wrecking and Supply House, in order to accommodate their rapidly-growing business, have opened a branch in their new building at Eleventh and Main streets, under the name of the Los Angeles Motor Supply House.

The company maintains a service station for users of Ajax tires, and gives a written guarantee of 5000 miles with every Ajax sold. Various lines of accessories are carried by the company, and their place of business is open nights and Sundays, for the accommodation of the public.

REMARKABLE SHOTS HAVE SAVED THE DAY FOR GOLF CHAMPIONS.

BY HARRY VARDON.

THERE are some shots that live in memory. They present themselves to every grade of the golfing community. I thappens at times that the long-handicap player accomplishes a stroke which startles him by its excellence, and if it is not quite as good as the tour de force of a champion, the joy that it gives to its executant is complete.

What I would suggest is that, when the golfer wins this kind of exhilaration, he should reflect for a few moments on the subject of the stand, the swing, and other details which contributed to the making of the shot. Very likely he will be able to recall that he swung the club a trifle more easily and less snatchily than usual, that his weight was forward at the instant of impact or some other point that will stand out as a lesson learned.

Too often he is apt to go forward exultingly instead of thoughtfully. He is quite justified in permitting himself a glow of triumph, and he would be a peculiarly cold-blooded individual who could suppress it, but he is remiss when—the first flush past—he fails to try and learn something from it. The clever inventor rejoices exceedingly when the inspiration comes that achieves the end for which he has long been working, but he does not profit much unless he remembers how he has brought his efforts to a successful issue. The golfer cannot keep notes or working models of the various sections of his perfect shot, but frequently, if only he takes the trouble, he can point his mental finger-post to some detail of the mode of procedure that differed from the usual. That is precisely what he wants to do.

As a rule, the first-class golfer knows from long experience and persistent practice in the higher science of the game the reason why the ball does a thrillingly useful thing. I am reminded of this matter by a shot which J. H. Taylor played in a recent war fund match in which he and I opposed James Braid and Alexander Herd on the Mid-Surrey course near London—a match which, by the way, showed that Britain takes an interest in golf even in the midst of the European inferno, as about 3000 spectators were present. At one hole our ball was badly stymied by trees. They were too high to permit of a pitching shot, and yet it was necessary that Taylor should reach the green. He took a brassie, played right away to the left, and imparted such a prodigious slice to the ball that, near the end of its flight, it swung in almost like a boomerang and landed close to the hole.

That is a nice shot to know how to accomplish. It has a wondrous fascination, and it is not extraordinarily difficult so long as you possess the gift of being able to put "cut" on to a ball. Of precisely this nature were two strikes that I include among the best six shots I have ever played. One was made at St. Albans, in Bedfordshire, in a match against Braid, and the other on my home course at Totteridge in a contest with Edward Ray. In each case the circumstances were the same. If it had been possible to approach the green in a direct line, a mid-iron would have obtained the distance easily, but the ball had to travel by a route so circuitous that a brassie became necessary. And, indeed, a wooden club with a little loft on it is the easiest with which to accomplish such a stroke. It gets a better grip of the ball than any iron can do.

A good golfer could safely back himself to play the shot successfully nearly every time if he really had to do it. The first necessity is to stand very open and well behind the ball. In the ordinary way, we have this object in front of the body at a point more or less between the feet. For a whole-hearted curly slice which will send the ball out to the line, we want to stand so that it is opposite the toes of the left foot, with the right foot advanced sufficiently to turn the player's body toward the left. There should be flexibility in all the muscles, and most of all in the muscles that control the grip. A tight hold of the club is fatal to the stroke; the hit must be made with the slack grip which will draw the face of the brassie across the ball at the impact instead of merely jabbing at it. When I play the stroke, I very nearly let go of the club as I hit. The grip may not be quite so loose as that, but certainly that is how it seems. At any rate, if you hold firmly, the ball will travel straight all the way, which is not what you have set out to make it do.

There are many sorts of great shots, their value sometimes depending on circumstances. One of the best I remember was accomplished by Mr. Francis Ouimet when he was engaged in a neck-or-nothing struggle to tie for the United States open championship at Brookline, Mass., in 1913—the event which he won so worthily. Before the replay in which he beat Ray and me, it looked fairly long odds against his tieing, especially when at the fifteenth hole he hit a thoroughly bad second shot right off the socket of his iron. He had to do the last four holes in something under par to finish level. He knew it, and here, apparently, was a stroke irretrievably lost. He recovered by laying a mashie shot practically dead, although he had to play it over a big, yawning bunker, and I am sure that there was never a finer effort in a critical situation. It was the shot which enabled him to gain that championship.

OUT OF BUNKER SHOTS.

I suppose that bunkers offer the best opportunities for strokes of the theatrical kind because there is always a certain measure of sympathy for the person who is in trouble and a consequent heightening of the thrill of admiration among spectators when he recovers brilliantly. One of the best shots I ever saw played from a bunker was by Braid in the British open championship at St. Andrews in 1910. At the seventeenth—the dreaded "Road" hole—in the third round he was in the bunker to the left of the putting green, which was as keen as a sheet of ice. He was only five or six yards from the pin, and almost any other golfer would have been so impressed by the proximity of the hole as to depend upon a moderately gentle swing in order to dislodge the ball. In fact, that way of getting out would almost assuredly have resulted in the ball skating across the green and on to the road, whence in all probability it would have skidded back into the bunker from the next shot. Some men were going to and fro like this time after time. What Braid did was to hit with all his might—and he is an exceptionally powerful man—about five inches behind the ball. The latter just felt the force of the terrific explosion of sand and rose sluggishly out of the hazard to drop by the holeside.

This is the perfect way to play a bunker shot in such circumstances. I always consider that the stroke in question won the championship for Braid, because, if he had executed it in any other way the hole might easily have cost him eight or nine strokes.

Another very fine bunker shot that I recall was one made by George Duncan when he beat Braid in the final of the News of the World tournament at Walton Heath a few years ago. It finished the match in his favor and a more thrilling way of effecting that purpose nobody could desire. He was bunkered about 130 yards short of the sixteenth hole. The ball was lying cleanly in the sand and, taking his spoon, he hit a beautiful shot onto the green.

Naturally, the only way in which he could achieve that end was by putting plenty of cut and back-spin on to the ball so as to make it rise sharply. Unless you can introduce this combination of cut and back-spin, it is not much use trying to get long distances out of bunkers, and in no case is it worth while trying to do so when the ball is lying at all heavily in the sand. When, however, it is sitting up, this particular shot is, if anything, easier to play in a bunker than off the turf because a ball that is really "teed" in a bunker is poised beautifully clear of the soil. The shot is accomplished by addressing the ball with the hands just a little bit in front of it and pushing the club out a little in the up swing so that, when it come down, the face of the club is drawn across the ball. The degree of back-spin that can be secured in a bunker is remarkable. One of my own shots of this kind at Walton Heath (it was at the thirteenth hole) pitched fully seven yards past the pin and sprang back with such force that it actually finished two yards from the hole.

It is not often that you see a right-handed golfer play a left-handed shot in a big match. Willie Park, who is now in America designing courses, hit a beauty when he and I met for $500 a side at North Berwick. It was a truly splendid effort because only a left-handed shot was possible to him. He was on the beach, among rocks and sand, near the seventeenth hole, about eight yards from the hole, and then ran down his putt for a half. Park always used to carry a left-handed club in case of emergencies and it served him very well on this occasion.

THE "HOLE IN ONE" SHOT.

I do not know whether holes done in one stroke qualify for inclusion in a chapter dealing with notable shots. They are largely flukes; at least, that is what most people say, and I am not going to dispute the verdict of the great majority, especially as I have accomplished a hole in one on only a single occasion in my life. That was something like ten years ago. I nearly had another at Totteridge this spring. The ball stopped on the brink of the hole—"looking into it" as my partner described the situation—and if there had been a puff of wind, the ball would have gone in.

The most remarkable "hole in one" that I have ever seen counted as two. It happened at Port Erin, in the Isle of Man. My partner in a four-ball match, Edward Ray, had driven out of bounds and as I then put my tee shot near the pin he was disposed to go on without playing another shot. "Have a try," I suggested. "You might hole out." "All right," he said, "I will hole out." And he did! The shot was a full drive. Was that a fluke?

I hope, at any rate, that a hole in one will never again cause so much disappointment as ensued at Newquay a few years ago when Taylor and I were playing there. Before starting the match we practiced for a few holes and Taylor did the eighteenth in one. Some hundreds of local people who had turned up were on the point of going home bored almost to death when this occurred. They decided to stay on and see the match. Their remarks at the finish, when neither of us had accomplished another one, constituted the last word in displeasure. "I thought at any rate we should see them do half a dozen more 1's," said an aggrieved individual who voiced the feelings of the majority. "Fancy spending all day looking at them taking 3's and 4's." It is sometimes very hard for the professional to give satisfaction.

DOIG ASSISTANT TO MITCHELL, NOW.

After being in the employ of the Automobile Club of Southern California for the past three years, Don S. Doig has been selected as assistant to Secretary Mitchell of that organization.

For about a year after entering the employ of the Auto Club Mr. Doig served as a member of the touring department of that organization, but about two years ago he was selected as head of the forwarding department, which was at that time incorporated as an active part of the work of the club. Since that time, and until his appointment as assistant secretary, Mr. Doig has had charge of the forwarding bureau.

The big acreage circled by the two-mile track at the Sheepshead Bay Speedway will soon be planted with potatoes.

GOTCH SAYS CADDOCK, NOT LEWIS, IS THE BETTER MAN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO BUREAU OF THE TIMES, June 2.—"Caddock is too light for a real heavyweight champion. When the war is over, the European wrestlers will crush him to the mat decisively." This is the trend of talk heard among mat fans, but it is not the "dope." Frank Gotch weighed no more than Caddock when he fought and won some of the hardest matches of his career.

It is natural for Gotch to be partial to Caddock. It is to be expected that Gotch should want to see a grappler of the class of Caddock keep the title away from the wrestler from Dodge, Neb.

Stecher is a one-hold wrestler. He won fame and dollars and a banker's daughter on the strength of the scissors hold. It was his one best bet. It was a bear-trap hold that fairly squeezed his opponents into submission. It trapped Cutler and Americus and Westergaard and Ordeman and all the other pretenders to Gotch's throne.

"The man who figures out a defense for the scissors hold will beat Stecher, for that's all he knows," said Gotch when he announced his permanent retirement from the game.

Caddock, coached by Gotch and others, knew more about the mat game than Lewis. This athlete, representing the Chicago Athletic Club, had won renown among the amateurs and was a finished wrestler before Stecher had appeared on the Nebraska mat horizon.

This Sale Is Unparalleled. No Lesser Organization Could Undertake Such an Extraordinary Clearance

THIRTEEN SALESMEN are required to handle our immense volume of Used Car sales. Each salesman necessarily KNOWS cars—all cars—knows WHY they cost WHAT they cost.

Yesterday each man was asked to pick from our entire stock the FIVE cars which he thought offered the biggest value, either because marked below the average used car market price or because of uncommonly fine condition—in other words, THE FIVE CARS HE COULD SELL QUICKEST.

The cars listed here today are the pick of all the cars thus chosen.

Every car advertised is BELOW THE MARKET—because either price, or condition, or both, make it an EXCEPTIONAL VALUE.

Such cars always sell fast.

If you want a Used Car this season—and you do—

COME AS EARLY AS YOU CAN.

WRITE A POSTCARD asking for a demonstration and we will send to you the car in which you are most interested, or Telephone Main 6060, Home 60406.

The Chalmers
For War-Time Use

Why buy high priced cars, expensive to run, when the Chalmers furnishes accommodations and luxury equal to any at infinitely less cost?

Heavy cars, big tires and high fuel consumption do not necessarily mean greater efficiency and luxury.

The Chalmers moderate size, light weight body equipped with the Chalmers efficient six-cylinder motor completely satisfies the most critical.

These are not mere assertions. They have been proven by speed and efficiency tests under the official supervision of the Contest Board of the A.A.A.

Come in and let us give you full details and show you why the Chalmers is a good war-time purchase.

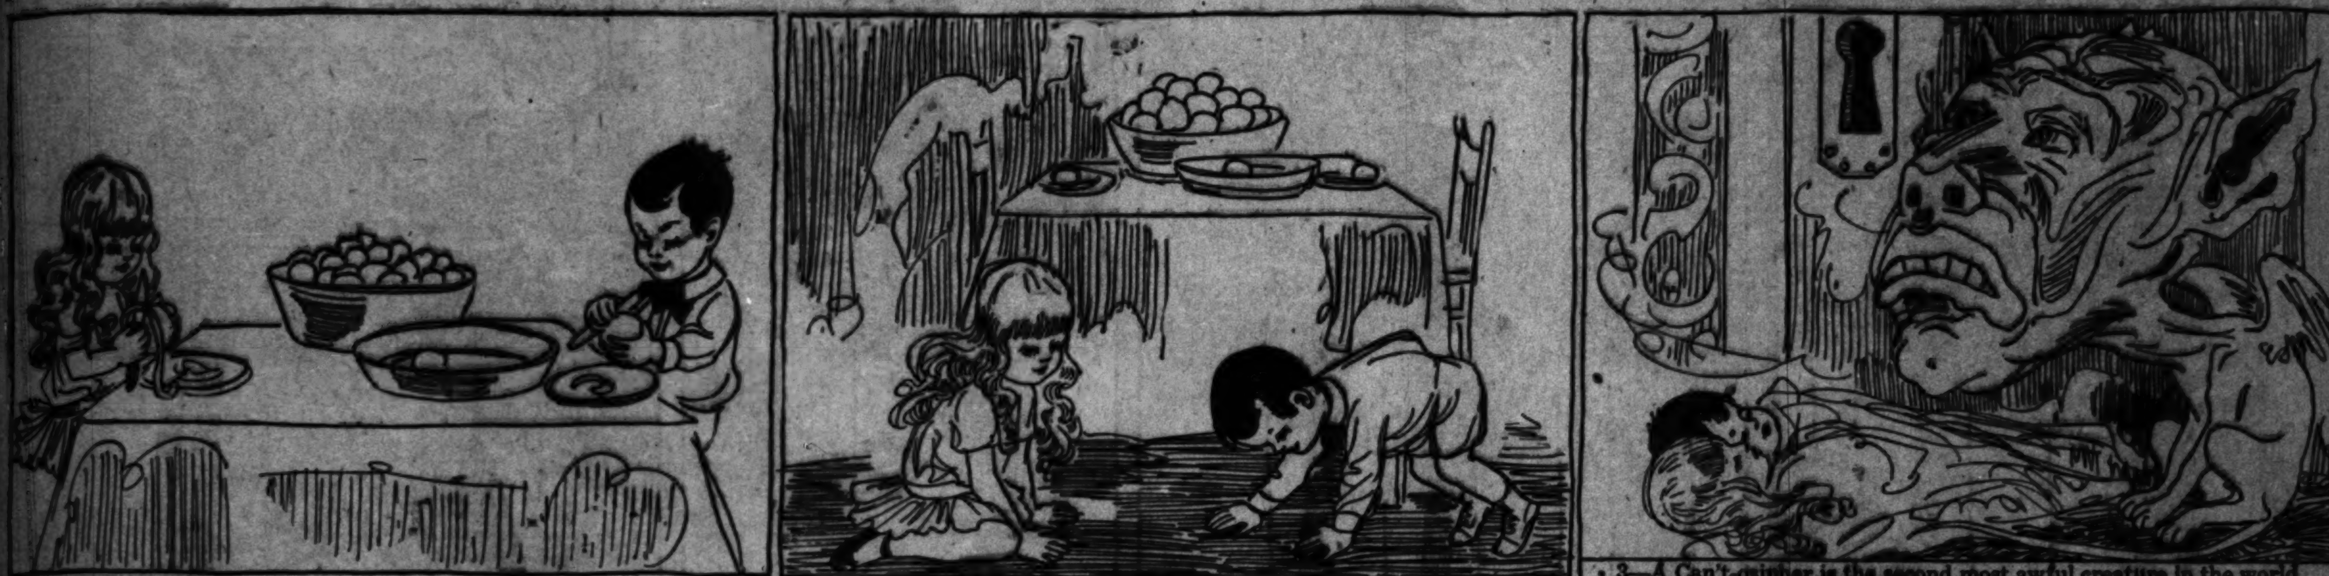
ONCE UPON A TIME

BY CLYDE LUDWICK

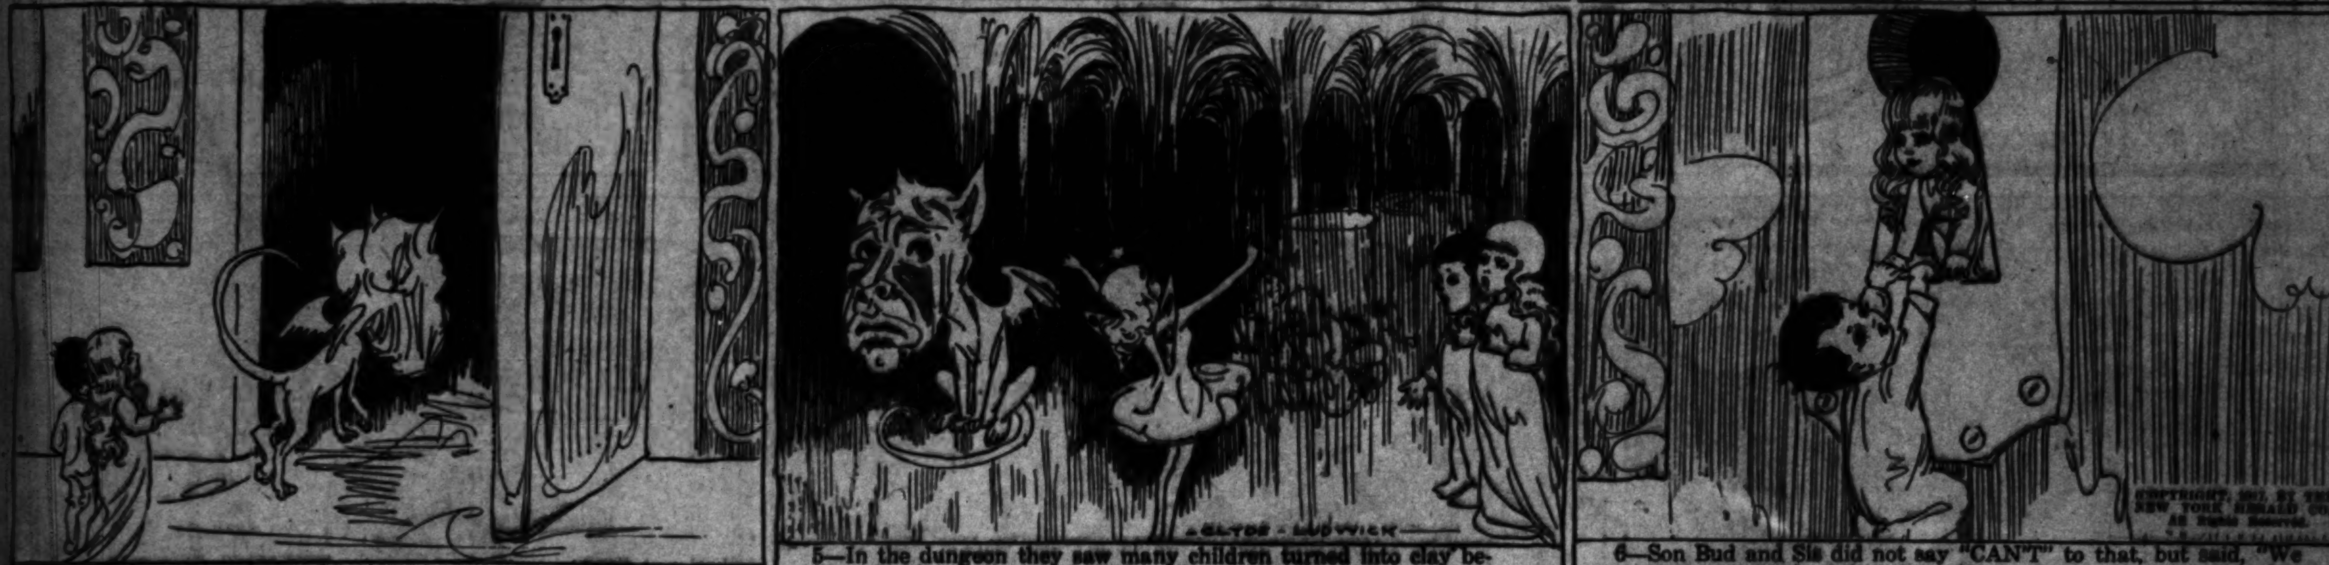
THE CHILDREN LEARNED THAT STRANGE THINGS HAPPEN TO PEOPLE WHO SAY "CAN'T"



1—Mother put Son Bud and Sis to peeling pears, for she knows how little folks like home made preserves in the winter. Then, too, she believed children should learn to do things around the house.

2—Presently they grew weary of peeling pears. Sister complained, "I CAN'T peel these old pears, and I don't intend to try!" and Son Bud answered, "I CAN'T either!" So saying CAN'T, they quit and began to play horse.

3—A Can't-osipher is the second most awful creature in the world. He is neither man nor monkey nor bird nor bat. He can always find children who say "CAN'T" in the dark, just as he found Son Bud and Sis that night. He bade them enter the dungeon of Do-Nothing, and with their sleeping eyes they saw a huge door.



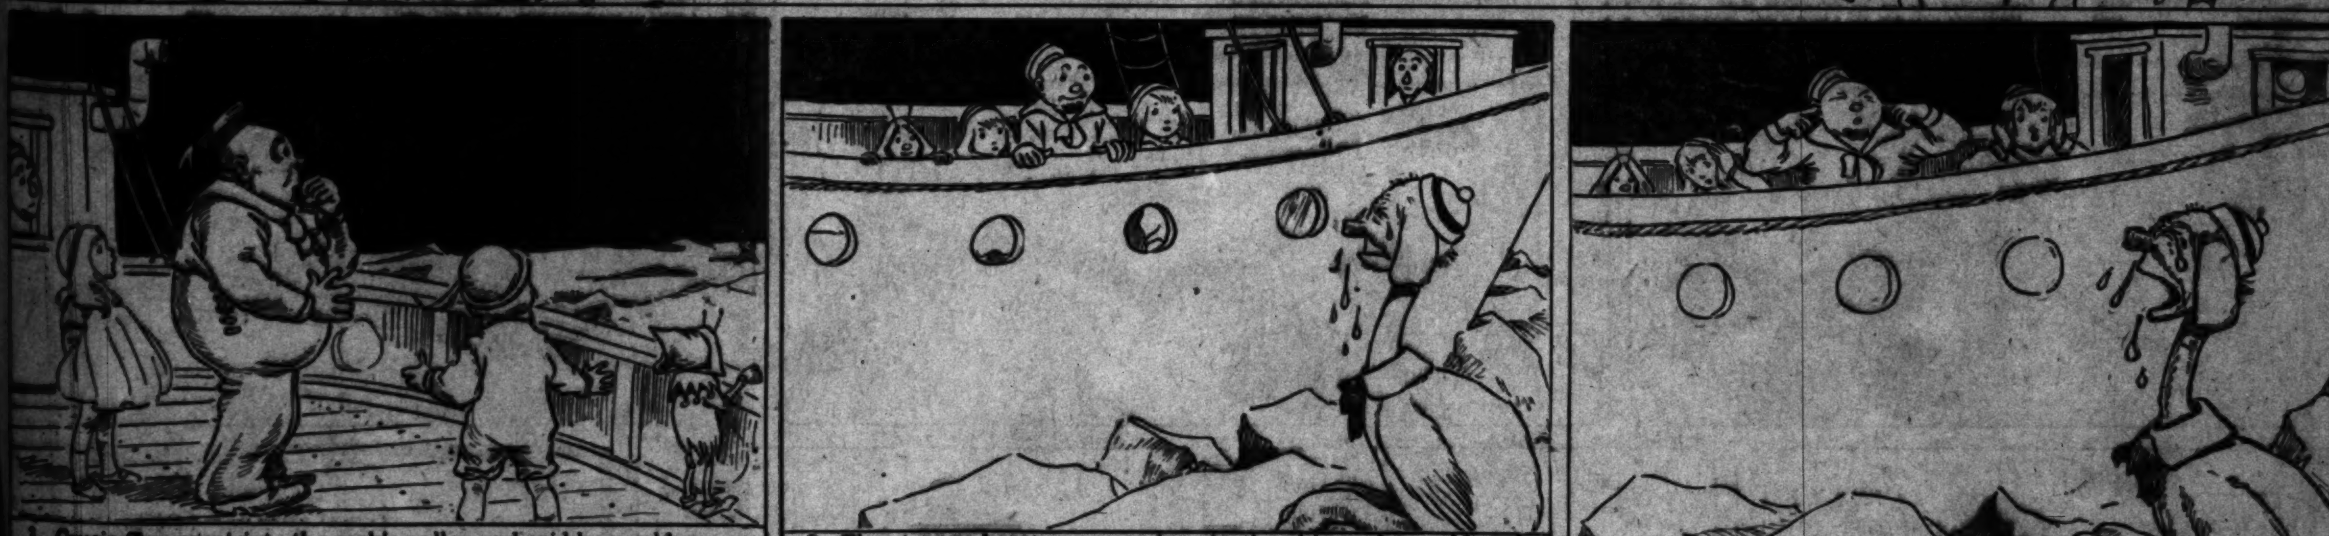
CLYDE LUDWICK
COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE NEW YORK HERALD CO. All Rights Reserved.

4—Son Bud and Sis did not wish to go into the dungeon, so they answered saying, "We CAN'T; we are asleep." But "CAN'T" was the password. The huge door swung open and the children just could not help following the Can't-osipher into the dungeon.

5—In the dungeon they saw many children turned into clay because they had said "CAN'T." Then the children remembered that they had said "CAN'T peel pears," and they felt sorry and began to wonder what would happen to them. Then Fairy Determination appeared and said, "Climb out of the keyhole before you turn to clay," for the big door had closed on them.

6—Son Bud and Sis did not say "CAN'T" to that, but said, "We WILL TRY," and they did. Do you know, since that day Fairy Determination has helped the children do everything that is hard to do because they never say "CAN'T" but say "We WILL TRY," for they do not want to go to the dungeon of Do-Nothing.

MR. TWEE DEEDLE.



1—Cousin Tom went into the cook's galley and said he would prepare the dinner, while the fat little sailor, Dickie, Dolly and Mr. Twee Deedle could remain on deck. He was singing away inside when the fat little sailor cried, "Ship Ahoy! There is something approaching us in the offing!" The children stopped their games and watched a strange animal approach.

2—The strange beast came as close to the ship as he could and stood looking at them. "Hello!" cried the fat little sailor and the children. At this the strange beast wrinkled up his face and began to cry. Large tears dripped from his eyes and dropped down over his collar "Perhaps we have hurt his feelings," said the fat little sailor.

3—The fat little sailor tried to comfort the strange beast with kind words, but the more he talked to him the louder the beast howled, so that all of our friends had to hold their hands over their ears in order to think clearly.

JOHN B GRUELLE

4—The howling of the strange beast increased until all our friends had to seek refuge in the cook's galley, and his cries made their ears ring even when they closed the door. "I have heard of him before!" Cousin Tom shouted to the others. He is called the Cry Baby Beast."

5—Cousin Tom and the fat little sailor could stand the beast's crying no longer, so they rushed outside and turned the ship's hose down the Cry Baby Beast's mouth. This stopped his howling. After coughing and sputtering for a few minutes the Cry Baby Beast smiled at them and said, "Thank you so much for curing me that way.

6—"I started to cry at the least excuse when I was very small, and the habit grew on me so that it was hard for me to keep from crying even when I was sleeping, but now the water from the hose has washed all the salt out of my body, so that I feel I will be happy and cheerful from now on, because everybody knows one cannot have tears without salt."

With these words the Cry Baby Beast kicked up his heels in a joyous manner and, singing to himself, ran across the Star Land.

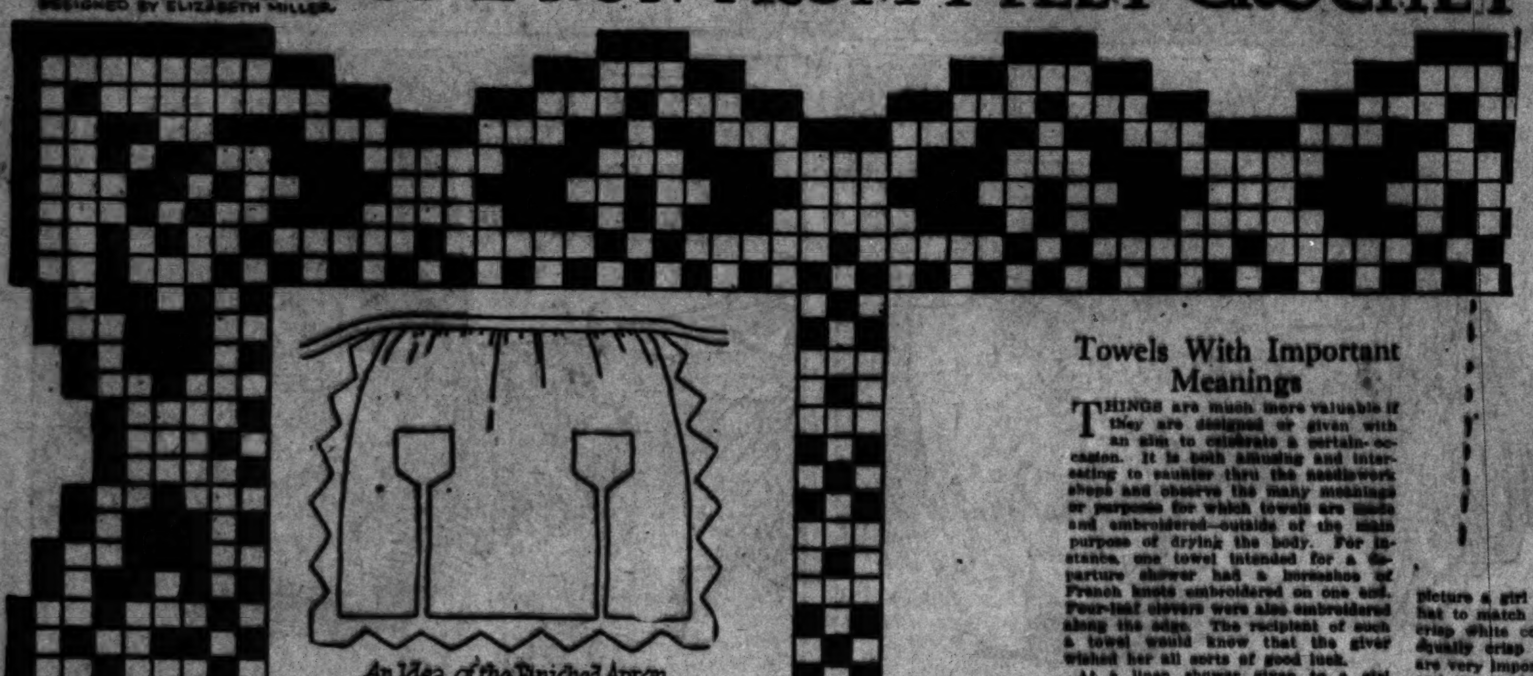
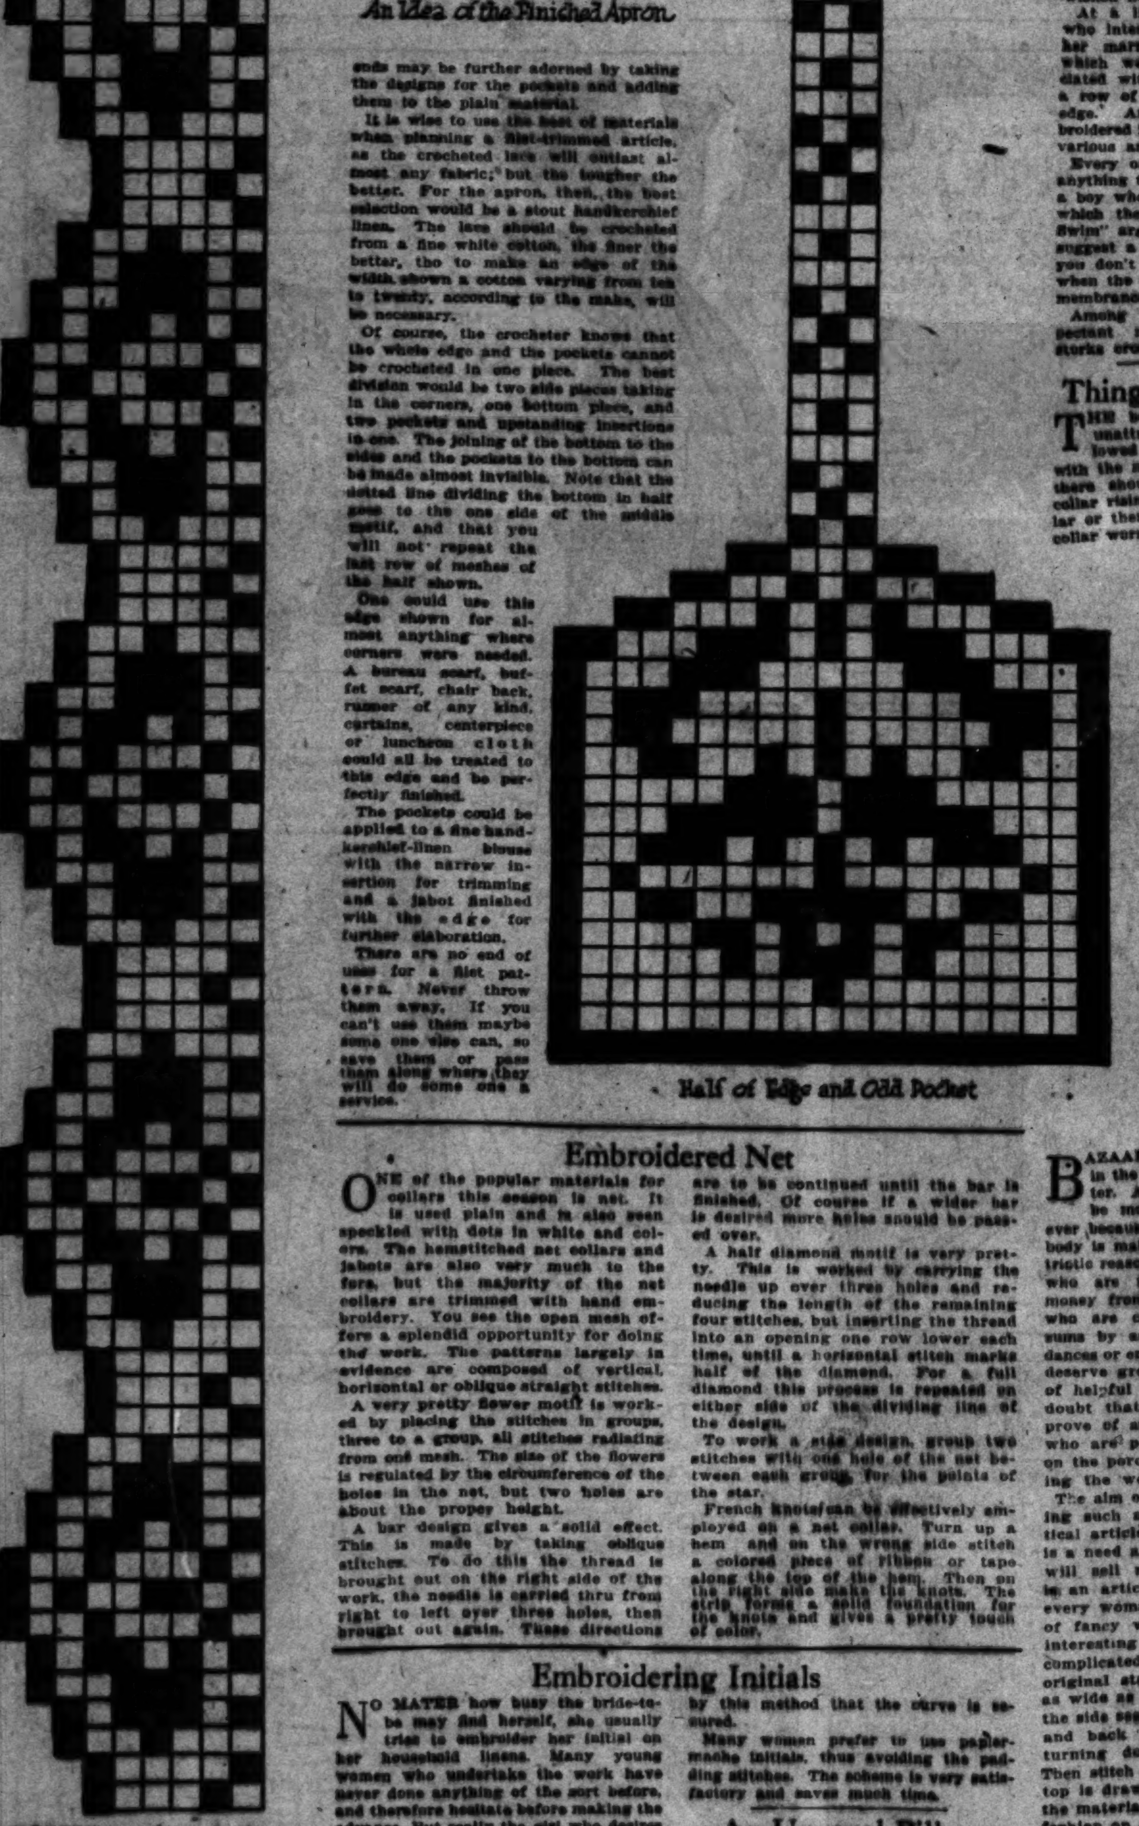
FOR THE INDUSTRIOUS NEEDLEWOMAN

BY ADELAIDE BYRD

A DAINTY APRON FROM FILET CROCHET

DESIGNED BY ELIZABETH MILLER





An Idea of the Finished Apron

Half of Edge and Odd Pocket

WHERE is the woman who cannot make use of a dainty apron? If it is only for putting over one's good skirt when making a bed in the morning, the little square or oblong of lace and lawn is a mighty handy thing to have around. Lots of girls wear these aprons to protect their skirts when working at a desk or typewriter.

Hand crocheted filet is an ideal trimming for the dainty apron. It is at once durable and lacy enough for a thin material of which most aprons of this type are made. The design calls for an edge with patterned corners of which but one-half is shown, the rest can be repeated from the half already given. One pocket or two can be supplied, and the narrow insertion which connects the pockets to the apron may be omitted if desired. The top of the apron is gathered into a plain belt and [illegible] ends may be further adorned by taking the designs for the pockets and adding them to the plain material.

It is wise to use the best of materials when planning a filet-trimmed article, as the crocheted lace will outlast almost any fabric; but the tougher the better. For the apron, then, the best selection would be a stout handkerchief linen. The lace should be crocheted from a fine white cotton, the finer the better, tho to make an edge of the width shown a cotton varying from ten to twenty, according to the make, will be necessary.

Of course, the crocheter knows that the whole edge and the pockets cannot be crocheted in one piece. The best division would be two side pieces taking in the corners, one bottom piece, and two pockets and upstanding insertions in one. The joining of the bottom to the sides and the pockets to the bottom can be made almost invisible. Note that the dotted line dividing the bottom in half goes to the one side of the middle motif, and that you will not repeat the last row of meshes of the half shown.

One could use this edge shown for almost anything where corners were needed. A bureau scarf, buffet scarf, chair back, runner of any kind, curtains, centerpiece or luncheon cloth could all be treated to this edge and be perfectly finished.

The pockets could be applied to a fine handkerchief-linen blouse with the narrow insertion for trimming and a jabot finished with the edge for further elaboration.

There are no end of uses for a filet pattern. Never throw them away. If you can't use them maybe some one else can, so save them or pass them along where they will do some one a service.

Towels With Important Meanings

THINGS are much more valuable if they are designed or given with an aim to celebrate a certain occasion. It is both amusing and interesting to saunter thru the needlework shops and observe the many meanings or purposes for which towels are made and embroidered—outside of the main purpose of drying the body. For instance, one towel intended for a departure shower had a horseshoe of French knots embroidered on one end. Four-leaf clovers were also embroidered along the edge. The recipient of such a towel would know that the giver wished her all sorts of good luck.

At a linen shower given to a girl who intended to live on a farm after her marriage were many towels on which were embroidered things associated with farm life. One towel had a row of roses embroidered along the edge. Another had vegetables embroidered in realistic colors, and on some various animals were outlined.

Every one knows that a boy abhors anything that is fancy, but there is not a boy who would object to a towel on which the words "Here's for a Good Swim" are embroidered. The idea may suggest a practical gift the next time you don't know what to give the boy when the occasion demands a little remembrance.

Among towels showered on an expectant mother were several with storks cross-stitched along the end.

Things That Add Snap

THE best of coat suits will look unattractive if the collar is allowed to come in direct contact with the neck of the wearer. That is, there should be either a high light collar rising up inside of the coat collar or there should be a suitable light collar worn over the collar of the coat.

The coat collar lying against the skin detracts from one's appearance and, as one girl remarked, it makes the wearer look as tho she hadn't finished dressing. Frequently the blouse collar can be thrown over the coat collar; but where this is not expedient one can embroider for herself a little collar of white pique. The collars of crepe de chine, washable satin or Georgette are also satisfactory for this purpose.

Can you imagine the immaculate picture a girl in a dark blue suit with hat to match will make if she wears a crisp white collar on the coat and an equally crisp vest? Vests, you know, are very important accessories just now and are made of numerous materials. Linen, [illegible]ges, wide ribbons, suede and taffeta are among the favored fabrics employed for this role. As a rule the vests are of contrasting color, but have touches of embroidery to introduce the color of the suit.

A bright flower worn with a dark suit or frock has a wonderful effect both on the suit and on the wearer. The psychological effect of colors on one's disposition is an interesting study. Not only do the cheerful colors affect the wearer, but they reflect cheerfulness in the minds of observers.

Cute Idea For the Wedding

THIS is a great time for brides. They blossom forth as profusely and as prettily as do the flowers of the field. Every bride is eager for suggestions that will make her wedding just a little bit different from the weddings that have been held before; therefore, it is a pleasure to give the following idea:

When ordering the little boxes in which wedding cake is to be distributed among friends and relatives take to the caterer a piece of the material of which the wedding gown is made and have him make a tiny high hat of it for the groom's piece and a heart-shaped box for the bride's portion. The unique form of the receptacles will prove a big incentive for preserving the souvenirs. Of course the material is supported by a foundation of the pasteboard.

AN IMPORTANT SUGGESTION

IF YOU knew that some one was about to bestow a gift upon yo[illegible] wouldn't you desire to have that gift something you could [illegible] and not a thing to be stored away and brought to view only when [illegible] donor appeared on the scene? Well, then, profit by your own feeling and let your gift to another be something useful. If you're in doubt just glance over the design and articles displayed on the page today. They are practical for individual gifts and for contributions to the bazaar.

Foiling the Fly

EVERY one knows how necessary it is not only to swat the fly but to actually kill the spreader of disease. However, it is not convenient for one to be on hand every minute of the day to battle with this annoying insect. There are other duties to be performed in this busy world, and therefore some provision must be made to ward off the dangerous attacks of the winged creature. Perhaps the helpless babe is the first cause to get consideration. Authorities have told mothers that a baby is many per cent better for sleeping in fresh air; therefore, the coach or, the little crib, if possible, should be wheeled on the porch or lawn to some comfortable spot for the precious member of the household to enjoy his nap. But unless the youngster is properly protected from the flies and other annoying insects the good results of the fresh air will be lost. It is, therefore, expedient to get a good quality of mosquito netting of sufficient size to sufficiently cover the coach or crib so that the tiny insect cannot intrude.

The next step is to provide some means of weighting the meshy covering so that it will not be blown off. Perhaps the best solution is to get a piece of elastic of sufficient length to encircle the coach and cover it with shirred ribbon. [illegible] covered elastic can then be [illegible] over the crib or the [illegible] snapped together, altho the [illegible] circle idea might prove [illegible] some. The snapping idea is [illegible] ful when ribbon is used [illegible] elastic.

It is sometimes a problem [illegible] how to keep the netting [illegible] the youngster's face when [illegible] is sleeping on a couch that [illegible] sides to keep the cover [illegible] is the solution: To the center [illegible] square of netting attach a [illegible] ribbon. This can then be tied [illegible] high object so that the netting [illegible] be well lifted from the [illegible] will be arranged to protect the [illegible]ing child.

Since every mother likes [illegible] ward for her child to be as [illegible] possible it may prove helpful [illegible] gest that the raw edges of the [illegible]ting should be hemmed or [illegible] bound with ribbon, either [illegible] white.

A happy idea in cribs is the [illegible] a fine wire netting in the sides [illegible] is painted white to match the [illegible] work and prevents any possible [illegible] the child's getting its head [illegible] the bars. At the same time it [illegible] the air to circulate freely.

Knitting For Uncle Sam

FROM the constant appearance of knitting bags on streets and piazzas it would seem that an enormous amount of knitting must be going on. Everybody made sweaters last summer, so what is it all about? Ha, the answer comes! All the girls and women, too, are knitting now for Uncle Sam. Of course it is rather soon for mufflers and wristlets, because the boys at the front won't need them this summer; but it is not a bad plan to make headway on a sweater or, better still, to turn out numbers of these knitted wipes or sponges for hospital use.

Here is the way they are made:

Use about No. 10 [illegible] cotton.

Cast on 25 stitches.

Knit two rows over all [illegible]

Knit one row, putting thread over needle and going back.

Embroidered Net

ONE of the popular materials for collars this season is net. It is used plain and is also seen speckled with dots in white and colors. The hemstitched net collars and jabots are also very much to the fore, but the majority of the net collars are trimmed with hand embroidery. You see the open mesh offers a splendid opportunity for doing the work. The patterns largely in evidence are composed of vertical, horizontal or oblique straight stitches.

A very pretty flower motif is worked by placing the stitches in groups, three to a group, all stitches radiating from one mesh. The size of the flowers is regulated by the circumference of the holes in the net, but two holes are about the proper height.

A bar design gives a solid effect. This is made by taking oblique stitches. To do this the thread is brought out on the right side of the work, the needle is carried thru from right to left over three holes, then brought out again. These directions are to be continued until the bar is finished. Of course if a wider bar is desired more holes should be passed over.

A half diamond motif is very pretty. This is worked by carrying the needle up over three holes and reducing the length of the remaining four stitches, but inserting the thread into an opening one row lower each time, until a horizontal stitch marks half of the diamond. For a full diamond this process is repeated on either side of the dividing line of the design.

To work a star design, group two stitches with one hole of the net between each group for the points of the star.

French knots can be effectively employed on a net collar. Turn up a hem and on the wrong side stitch a colored piece of ribbon or tape along the top of the hem. Then on the right side make the knots. The strip forms a solid foundation for the knots and gives a pretty touch of color.

Embroidering Initials

NO MATTER how busy the bride-to-be may find herself, she usually tries to embroider her initial on her household linens. Many young women who undertake the work have never done anything of the sort before, and therefore hesitate before making the advance. But really the girl who desires to place bold initials on her belongings needs only a knowledge of the satinstitch, for that is the stitch used in almost all initials and monograms. Of course occasionally one sees the seedstitch, the stemstitch and occasionally cutwork.

First of all, the edges of the letter stamped on the material must be run. This is really an important step, for upon it depends much of the appearance of the edges and the smoothness of the outlines of the letter. Fill between the lines with padding stitches, making them close together in the center of the wide parts of the letter and spaced more widely in the narrow part, so that the wide parts when the satinstitch is worked are highest.

See that the satinstitch curves with the letter. This must be done carefully so that the work will be smooth. In rounding the curve each stitch must be a little closer to the preceding stitch on the inner edge than on the outer. It is by this method that the curve is secured.

Many women prefer to use papiermache initials, thus avoiding the padding stitches. The scheme is very satisfactory and saves much time.

An Unusual Pillow

SOMETHING really new in the pillow line has been designed for the porch chair or for any cozy kind of chair that has a hollow at the back aching to be filled by a nice crushable pillow. The beginning of this pillow is just like any other—square with rounded corners or round, and made of almost any material to correspond with the rest of the hangings and upholstery. But here comes the important part: There is a tail to this pillow—sort of a stole extension which is probably about six inches wide and weighted with tassels and fringe. The idea of the stole is a ballast to be thrown over the back of the chair and to hold the pillow in the most comfortable position. Cushions have such an annoying way of crunching up and not helping to fill the hollows a bit. This cushion is particularly good for a willow chair.

Practical Articles for the Summer Bazaar

A Interesting Workbag

Barred Dimity Makes a Fetching

BAZAARS are just as much in style in the summer as they are in winter. And it is likely that they will be more popular this year than ever because of the great effort everybody is making to raise money for patriotic reasons. There are many women who are not in a position to offer money from their own allowance, but who are capable of gathering great sums by arranging bazaars or giving dances or entertainments. These women deserve great credit and are in need of helpful suggestions. There is no doubt that the articles shown will prove of assistance to many women who are planning to give a bazaar on the porch or lawn some time during the weeks to come.

The aim of every woman contemplating such a step is to collect practical articles, things for which there is a need and therefore things which will sell readily. Now a workbag is an article that is appreciated by every woman who does the least bit of fancy work. The bag shown is interesting in that it looks more complicated than it really is. In its original state the bag is just twice as wide as it is long. Before sewing the side seams take a deep tuck front and back on each side, the tucks turning down on the wrong side. Then stitch up the sides, and when the top is drawn up by means of a cord the material will be drawn up in cuff fashion on each side. Red, white and blue wool have been used to bring out the darning stitches and the floral designs that add so much to the beauty of the bag.

The fudge apron made of heavy linen is a familiar sight, but one made of barred dimity is a little different and seems to be more suitable for summer wear. For this reason aprons of this nature are bound to prove good sellers. This one is of white material. The double line of smocking at the top is done in blue. In the resulting puff of material white daisies with yellow centers are embroidered. At the bottom daisies grow up from the hem and gracefully scatter blossoms along the way. Even the button passed thru embroidered slots is beautified by hand embroidery. The straps passing over the shoulders are fastened to the belt in the back.

An attractive and useful article is the glass bonbon dish provided with a cover. The latter adjunct will be doubly appreciated on summer days, when candy and sweets need to be protected from insects and dust. An important point about the cover is that it can be constructed of an embroidery hoop, a piece of oriental embroidery—or flowered cretonne would do—and a kettle knob. The secret of a good-looking top of this kind is to get the material drawn taut. Needless to say, the knob and the hoop should be treated to a coat of enamel or varnish.

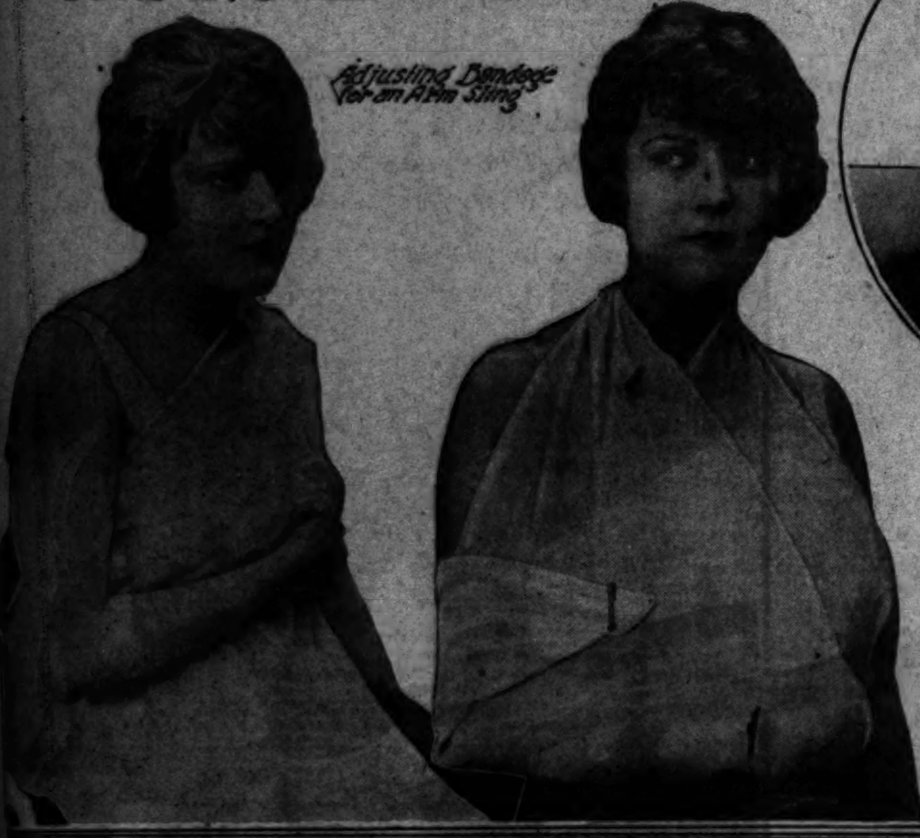
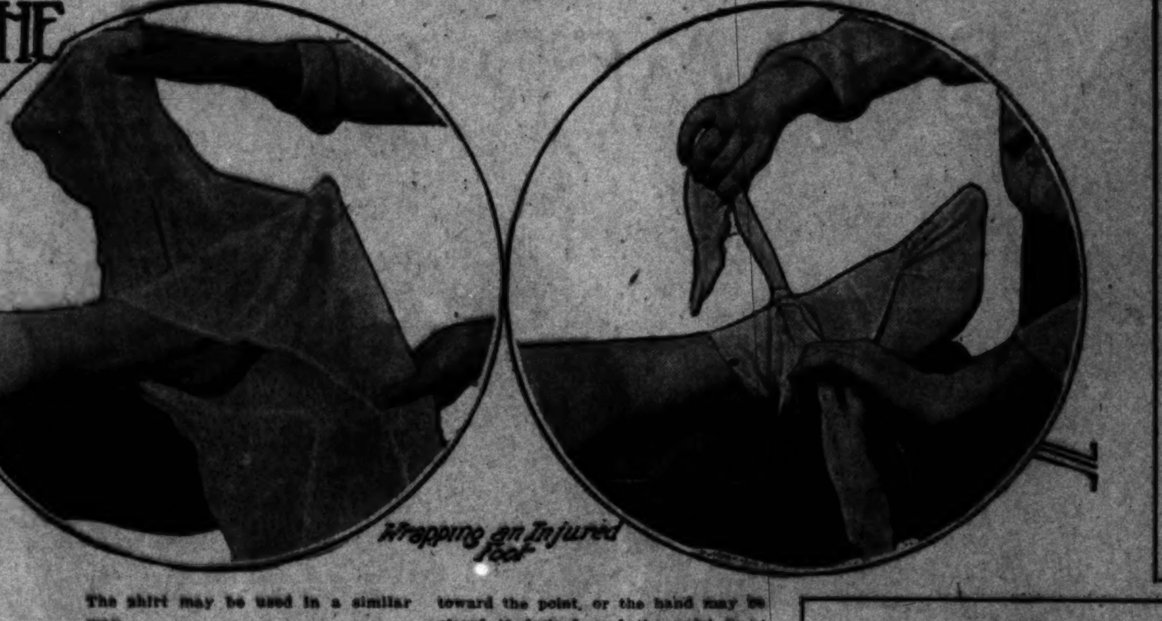
A LESSON IN THE USE OF THE TRIANGULAR BANDAGE



Adjusting Bandage for an Arm Sling



Wrapping an Injured Foot

HOW CAN I HELP?

THIS is the question asked by women in times of disaster, illness and warfare. There are many ways to help, but among them is the ability to use the hands, especially when there is need for bandaging. Would you know how to wrap a foot that had been injured or a head that had been torn open? Could you devise an arm sling if a piece of muslin were not at hand? If not, you should study the lesson which Mrs Symes has prepared for you today.

Some one has said that the smallest bit of knowledge we gain never goes amiss; that at some time or other we have occasion to use every bit of learning we have acquired. This fact should be borne in mind when we are advised to learn bandaging. Perhaps we cannot foresee the occasion when we would need to use the knowledge; but it is a thing that every woman should learn, especially at this time when there is a possibility that many will have to care for wounded soldiers. Of course, the women trained in the hospitals are all ready for such a contingency, but many women in the homes are not. Then, too, the art of bandaging is needed in time of peace as well as war. Accidents are liable to occur at any time and in any home, so it is best to be prepared to offer assistance. In extending first aid it is essential that one uses her head, otherwise more harm than good may be done; but equally important is the fact that one must be quick and ready to use one's hands. In learning to bandage experiment on some one at hand, for it is impossible to do the work properly without experience. Practice makes perfect in this as in all other instances.

Have you ever thought of the different kinds of bandages that are available and best suited to various uses? There are three kinds of bandages most frequently used. These are the triangular, the roller and the four-tailed bandage. It is the former which we will consider today, since it is the one for first-aid work, because it is easily made and easily applied.

For this type of bandage unbleached muslin cloth is suitable, altho old bed linen, pillow cases and handkerchiefs may be used to make it. To get the best results it is advisable to have the piece of cloth for the bandage not less than thirty-four to thirty-eight inches square. Fold this diagonally, cut across in the line of the fold and you have two bandages.

The triangular bandage may be used in two ways—unfolded or folded. When used unfolded the bandage is applied in the whole piece. To fold the triangular piece of cloth bring the point of the triangle to the middle of the opposite side. Then fold the bandage lengthwise to the width desired. The folded bandage is useful to hold splints, dressings, etc., in place, and to check bleeding when applied so as to compress the bleeding point.

The unfolded triangular bandage is useful as a sling for the arm. To adjust it, place the pointed end of the triangle behind the elbow of the injured arm, allow one end of the hypotenuse to fall over the shoulder of the uninjured side, allowing the length of the bandage to fall down in front of the chest. Bend the elbow of the injured arm to a right angle. Thus the forearm will lie across the middle of the bandage. Bring the lower end of the bandage over the shoulder of the injured arm and tie the ends together behind the neck. Draw the point of the bandage at the elbow forward to the front and pin it as illustrated so that the bandage will be snug and will not pull. It is advisable to use a safety pin for such purposes; it is more secure and safer than a straight pin. If at any time there is immediate need for a sling and one has nothing at hand with which to make a triangular bandage, a splendid sling may be made for the arm by pinning the skirt of the coat to the front of the coat.

The shirt may be used in a similar way.

When wrapping an injured foot in a triangular bandage place the foot in the center of the bandage with the toes toward the point. Bring the point over the toes to the instep and draw both ends forward, crossing them over the instep and tying them around the ankle as shown in the photograph.

When it is necessary to use the triangular bandage for the hand it is used just like the foot bandage. The material is spread out and the hand is placed on it, palm down, with the fingers toward the point, or the hand may be closed if desired, and the wrist is at the long side. The point is then drawn over the back of the hand to the back of the wrist, and the two ends are crossed over the wrist and tied.

The triangular bandage is most useful for tying up the head. The way to apply the cloth is to place the bandage so that the hypotenuse of the triangle is drawn straight across the forehead just above the eyes (a hem being folded under so the raveled edge will not hang in the eyes) with the point hanging down the back. Carry the two ends around the head above the ears, cross them at the back and tie across the forehead. Draw the point down tight, turn it up and pin it at the top of the head with a safety pin. The illustration will make clear the directions.

When tying a knot arrange to have it where it will cause no discomfort to the patient and where it may be easily reached.

Always place the part to be bandaged in the position in which it is to be kept or carried, as a change of position after the bandaging is done may result in stoppage of blood circulation.

In applying a bandage allow for swelling. Very often the injured part does not begin to swell until after the bandaging is done.

Bear in mind the fact that a wet bandage will shrink upon drying and may, therefore, prove uncomfortably tight if not applied with this thought in mind.

Treatment for Freckles

My dear Mrs. Symes,

Will you please print a cure for very obstinate freckles? I have never been able to rid myself of them. Thanking you in advance, I am, B. M.

Below I am printing a treatment which may help you. Be careful to keep the face well-shaded at all times; the reason for this is obvious.

Doctor Wilson's Treatment for Obstinate Freckles

(Recommended by Erasmus Wilson, and tho excellent in obstinate cases, does not suit all complexions equally well.)

Elder-flower ointment	1 ounce
Sulphate of zinc	20 grains

Mix well and rub on the affected skin at night. In the morning wash the cerate off with soap and soft water, and afterward apply a lotion thus composed:

Citric acid	30 grains
Infusion of rose	½ pint

All local discolorations, Doctor Wilson affirms, will disappear under this treatment; or, if the freckles do not yield, they will at least be greatly ameliorated.

The length of time it takes to effect a cure varies with different persons.

Desires to Reduce Weight

My dear Mrs. Symes,

I am a young girl of [illegible], 5 feet 3 inches tall, and weigh [illegible] pounds. I desire to reduce my weight. Please give me the proper weight for a person of my height and years; also, some advice on reducing without permanent injury to my health. Thanking you in advance for your valuable advice, I am, H. L.

The corresponding weight for your height and years is [illegible] pounds. Below I am printing suggestions for reducing, together with a diet, both of which ought to be followed faithfully if you desire results.

Diet to Reduce Obesity

MAY EAT

Oysters, lobsters, frogs' legs, clams, soups of any kind without flour or fat thickening.

Fish—Fresh, salt or smoked of any kind cooked without fat or butter.

Lean meats; no ham, liver or pork.

Eggs—Any style, poached, shirred, omelet or dropped.

Game—Poultry, chicken, duck, turkey, etc.

Vegetables—Tomatoes, turnips, squash, carrots, string beans, onions, cabbage, peas, cauliflower, asparagus, salads, celery, watercress, pickles of any sort.

Bread made of gluten.

Coffee and tea. Water in any quantity should be taken except with meals.

Milk sparingly and liquors very moderately.

MAY NOT EAT

Sugar and all substances containing sugar (sweet cakes, ice cream, jellies, preserved fruits, etc.).

All fatty substances, oils, sardines, butter, cream, gravies, etc.

White bread, oatmeal and rice, potatoes and all foods containing starch.

Sweet wines, ales and beer.

For General Reduction of Flesh

Avoid all starchy and sweetened food, all cereals, vegetables containing sugar or starch, such as peas, beans, corn, potatoes, etc. Have your bread toasted; sprinkle it with salt instead of using butter. Milk, I regret to say, if it be pure and good, is fattening. Skimmed milk may be drunk. Hot water is an excellent substitute for other liquids. Add a little of the juice of limes or lemons to it, if you choose. Limit your sleeping hours to seven at the outside. No naps. You must take exercise.

For Thick Lips

My dear Mrs. Symes,

I am a constant reader of your columns and am coming to you for advice. What can I do to overcome thick lips? At times my lips look quite large. The condition is due to biting them when chapped. I bite my finger nails also, but do not seem able to break either habit. Please tell me what I can do in both cases, as I have faith in your help. PEGGY.

You cannot hope to improve the appearance of your nails or your lips until you exert more will power and overcome these habits ruinous to the beauty of both features. Bitter aloes applied to the fingertips is effectual in helping matters along. Neither wet nor bite the lips. If you will apply a bit of cold cream to them before you go out of doors, it will lessen the tendency to chapping. You can overcome the apparent thickness of your lips by holding the mouth a bit firm.

Treatment for Pimples

My dear Mrs. Symes,

I have numerous pimples and blackheads on my face and chest. What can I do to acquire a clear complexion? I am very fond of ice cream; I eat it daily. Would that cause pimples? Also, I am constipated sometimes. How can I overcome this?

What is a good powder for the face?

How can I develop my bust? It is quite flat.

I have a wart on my hand. How can I remove it? I have tried several things, but none was successful. Thanking you in advance for your advice, I am, GRATEFUL.

Constipation is doubtless one of the causes of your trouble. Proper food, plenty of sleep, plenty of water, and regular exercise in the open—these are the only reliable cures for the condition. If you would have a clear, healthy complexion you must, in addition, [illegible] abstain from sweets—ice cream included—pastries, and indigestible food generally. Below I am printing a cream for the temporary removal of the pimples, and a lotion for the treatment of blackheads.

A plain rice powder is perhaps the best to use. I am printing below a formula for a good face powder should you care to try it.

Following are two good bust developers—one a massage cream and the other a remedy taken internally.

I am printing also a formula for the removal of warts.

Fomatti Cream for Pimples

Extract of violet	10	drops
Sweet almond oil	1½	drams
Sulphur precipitate	75	grains
Lanolin	75	grains
Oxide of zinc	2	scruples

Blackheads of the Skin

Boracic acid	2 drams
Alcohol	2 ounces
Rosewater	4 ounces

Use with friction twice a day on the skin affected.

Powder of White Geranium

(A Toilet Powder)

Starch powder	½ pound
Powdered orris root	1 ounce
Oil of geranium	15 drops

Crush free from lumps. Add the perfume a drop at a time.

To make a pink powder for the face, add carmine to above recipe. It is best to mix the carmine with alcohol first and then add to the toilet powder.

Massage Cream for the Bust

Lanolin	5	ounces
Spermaceti	½	ounce
Mutton tallow (freshly tried)	4	ounces
Cocoanut oil	4	ounces
Tincture of benzoin	1	dram
Oil of neroli	20	drops

Mix as you would any cream of the sort. Rub on gently at night.

Wart Eradicator

Sublimed sulphur	120 grains
Glycerin	5 fluid drams
Acetic acid	1 fluid dram

Apply repeatedly to each wart, continuing the treatment for several days. The warts dry up and then drop off.

Additional Flesh Desired

My dear Mrs. Symes,

I am a girl of 16, tall and rather thin. Can you recommend anything for me?

Also, I have two large dark brown spots on my chin. Can you recommend something cheap and harmless to whiten it in a short time?

I have a great many blackheads. Please recommend treatment. Thanking you for any advice that you may give me, I am, BROWN EYES.

Below I am printing suggestions for gaining flesh which, if you follow faithfully, will effect gratifying results in a comparatively short while.

If the spots are neither moles nor birthmarks they may yield to Doctor Wilson's treatment for obstinate freckles, which is printed elsewhere on the page today.

If you would rid yourself permanently of blackheads, it is advisable that you begin treatment from within. Eat only simple, nourishing foods, abstaining from sweets, pastries, and indigestible foods generally; drink plenty of water, sleep nine or ten hours out of the twenty-four and exercise in the open daily. Below I am printing a lotion which may help.

Suggestions for Gaining Flesh

To gain flesh take plenty of olive oil, eat eggs, butter, cereals and fatty broths, potatoes, peas, beans, corn, carrots and parsnips, figs, dates, nuts, bananas, underdone beefsteak and roast beef. Drink plenty of milk, cream and cocoa. Avoid food that will not digest easily, and be careful to masticate thoroly what you do eat. Give up pickles, vinegar, and all acids. Exercise freely in the open air, and take plenty of sleep. Don't fret or worry; this will keep one thin more than anything else. Cultivate an easy-going disposition, if you possibly can.

Lotion for Blackheads

Pure brandy	3 ounces
Cologne	1 ounce
Liquor potassa	½ ounce

Apply at night, after washing the face thoroly with soap and water.

To Develop the Bust

My dear Mrs. Symes,

Will you please tell me how to enlarge the bust? I am a married woman, have three children and nurse them all. Since they are older I am almost flat. I prefer a massage cream for the purpose.

I have a daughter 10 years old. Her hair is long and very thin. Can you tell me of something to make it come in thicker? Thanking you in advance, I am, A READER.

Below I am printing a massage cream for developing the bust, together with a remedy to be taken internally which you may care to try.

If you will rub a bit of coarse vaseline into the child's scalp every night, the condition of the hair ought to improve.

Massage Cream for the Bust

Lanolin	5	ounces
Spermaceti	½	ounce
Mutton tallow (freshly tried)	4	ounces
Cocoanut oil	4	ounces
Oil of sweet almonds	4	ounces
Tincture of benzoin	1	dram
Oil of neroli	20	drops

Mix as you would any cream of the sort. Rub on gently at night.

Dr. Vaucaire's Remedy for the Bust

Liquid extract of galega (goatsrue)	3	fl. dr.
Lacto-phosphate of lime	135	grains
Tincture of fennel	10	minims
Simple syrup (sugar and water 2 to 1)	13½	ounces

The dose is 2 soupspoonfuls with water before each meal.

ADVICE ON SOCIAL CUSTOMS

Mrs. Charles Adams [illegible]

[If a] personal reply is desired a self-addressed stamped envelope should be inclosed. Requests relative to entertainments must be forwarded at least two weeks in advance.]

Way to Celebrate Class Day

CLASS DAY is very much of a tradition; but it is also very much of a problem when novelty is demanded, and particularly is this so in small schools. Of course there are always the history, the prophecy and the feature of the day—the presentations—to "fall back on"; but to have something different is quite the most natural desire in the world of the girl graduate who takes an especial pride first in her school, and then in her class.

If the graduating class is small, the intimacy of Class Day should be maintained first of all by debarring from its sacred precincts outsiders, however dear they may be to certain members of the class celebrating. Few of us really enjoy a prophecy about a personality unknown to us, and few of us can in all reason see the point when presentations are being made. Any attempt at explaining the reason for the particular presentation does away entirely with the charm of the custom. Fellow classmates usually know one another's foibles and idiosyncrasies too well for that. Now that we have decided on making the occasion delightfully intimate and in keeping with the tradition of history, a prophecy and presentations, let us get down to details, and to something different.

Instead of having the prophetess step forth in the brilliant of Class Day frocks, which are displayed to advantage at another time in the day, have her garbed as an Egyptian sorceress, invested with mystery as well [illegible] gazing into a crystal ball—an overturned fish aquarium banked with folds of dark cloth would serve admirably. Instead of having the prophecy written in story form, it would be very much more effective for the seer to preface each incident with various rites, incoherent expressions, and some such words as: "In thy depths I see." The historian clad in cap and gown, wearing horn-rimmed spectacles and a decidedly professorial expression, should provide no end of fun. Then the wit of the class might be selected to make the presentations. Garbed as a female jester bearing a huge sack, she need not utter one word during her entire performance. Winks and nods and smiles as she plucks each gift from the sack help make her a very entertaining part of the program. If the remembrances are provided with bits of looped string, the jester by suspending each from the tip of her wand would have little difficulty in showing each one to the whole class. A crooked forefinger and a wink are sufficient indication that the honored one is to step forth.

"Stunts" should by all means be a part of the program. A word from the president of the class imposes on each girl as she accepts her token a "stunt" in keeping with the character of the presentation. For example, the girl who is given a huge chamois because of incessant powdering, should repeat the process for the benefit of her companions, or the girl noted for exceptional backwardness should be given a little tin drum or a toy horn, and obliged to blow or play her hardest.

And thus much of the festivities over, refreshments come next in consideration. Refreshments need not be elaborate; simplicity and daintiness in the menu constitute a good half of its attractiveness. Minced pepper and olive sandwiches, minced nut and raisin sandwiches, perhaps a salad, ices, bonbons and cakes—these can be made most appetizing. Lampshades in the class colors, and flowers in the same color if procurable, place cards with an appropriate verse suited to each girl, and for a centerpiece a procession of wee dolls dressed in cap and gown—on these depends the charm of your decorative scheme.

But before leaving you with suggestions for making the day a success, you who have the honor of being on the committee in charge should make every effort to so obliterate any show of partiality, or any suggestion of "clique," that the day will be a happy memory in the life of every single girl present. The thorobred will not resent criticism of her pet weakness, either in the prophecy or in the presentation; but she is an unusual girl who, finding her hobby ridiculed and another's praised with some token of real regard, remembers the incident without some little sting of displeasure. If there is to be ridicule—and what fun is there without it where mutual sympathy and understanding hold sway?—then let it be the rule, and let it be uniform without exception. When every one gets her little rub, cause for hurt feelings ought to be successfully eliminated.

THE BEST DAY OF ALL

IT IS the class day, or whatever is substituted for it, that most graduates look forward to when commencement time draws near. It is the last intimate gathering of a class for a final frolic together. Let it be really intimate and a real frolic, and if you want it very original let it follow the suggestions given by Mrs. Adams today.

Solutions to Social Problems

Making Her Acquaintance

MY DEAR Mrs. Adams,

I am a boy of 16 and I like a girl about my age. I have never been introduced to her and she does not know me personally. I have talked to her over the telephone a few times, but I have never been out with her. I asked her to go out with me one evening, but she refused. I would like to have her friendship.

When a boy asks a girl to spend the evening with him, how should he ask her? After spending the evening with a girl and she says that she enjoyed the evening very much, what should the boy say?

When a boy takes a girl to the theater, who should go in first and who should choose the seats?

Please tell me how I may secure this girl's friendship. Does it make any difference whether we are formally introduced or not?

A CONSTANT READER.

Can you not secure some intimate friend who would present you to the girl?

If a young man wishes to extend an evening's entertainment, he should specify. It is quite proper to say: "Miss Blank, may I have the pleasure of your company at the theater on Thursday evening?" When a young lady expresses her appreciation of the entertainment, her escort should tell her that he is glad and he very much enjoyed her company.

When being ushered to seats, it is proper for the lady to precede. Otherwise, the man takes the precedence and chooses the seats, having first consulted the lady's choice.

Procure an introduction, by all means, else you may merit the young lady's disapproval.

He Does Not Remember

My dear Mrs. Adams,

We are two chums and were introduced to a young man at a bazaar and took a liking to him, but he does not seem to remember us, for he does not recognize us on the street. We ask you for advice as to renewing his acquaintance. Thanking you in advance, we are, BLUE EYES and BROWN EYES.

Since the young man was properly presented to you, it is your privilege to bow to him when you meet him. Whether or not he remembers you, courtesy will prompt him to acknowledge the salutation. If, however, you are quite sure that he does not recall you, could you not arrange to have him presented again?

He Does Not Write

My dear Mrs. Adams,

I am a girl of 17. Last summer I met a boy who seemed to fall in love with me after an acquaintance of a few weeks. I loved him just as much, but did not let him know it. I learned thru other people that the boy was worthy. We were both invited to take a trip with my aunt and uncle, tho by separate invitation. In that way we were together constantly for several weeks. During the trip he asked me if I would answer the letters that he intended to write to me when we were back in our homes, which are more than fifty miles apart. I said that I would. He wrote to me and a week later I answered his letter, but he has not written to me since, tho I looked and longed for an answer. I love him still. Please tell me what to do to regain his love.

Thanking you very much in advance for your advice, I am, MISS HOPEFUL.

If the young man does not care sufficiently to write again you had better put him out of your little head for your own peace of mind. Remember that you are quite young yet, and so is he. Infatuations of the sort are quite common to Seventeen. In a few years you will realize how elastic were your capacities for "undying" affection until real love came into your life.

Unappreciated Freedom

My dear Mrs. Adams,

I am a young girl 19 years old. Will you kindly tell me why it is that I cannot have a young man call on me steady? I have quite a number of men friends. They call on me for a short time. Then they stop without a cause. We always spend very nice evenings together. We are still friends and talk when we see each other. The one who called lately I like very much, but he doesn't call on me regularly. I have a sister who is admired by my young men friends; but she has a regular caller. We are girls that are well respected by young ladies and young men. I more than thank you in advance. I am, DISCOURAGED.

"Steady company" is not considered good form. You are fortunate in having so many men friends. Remember that you are very young yet, and doubtless most of your friends are quite as young. Do not be discouraged. Your "Prince Charming" will come in good time.

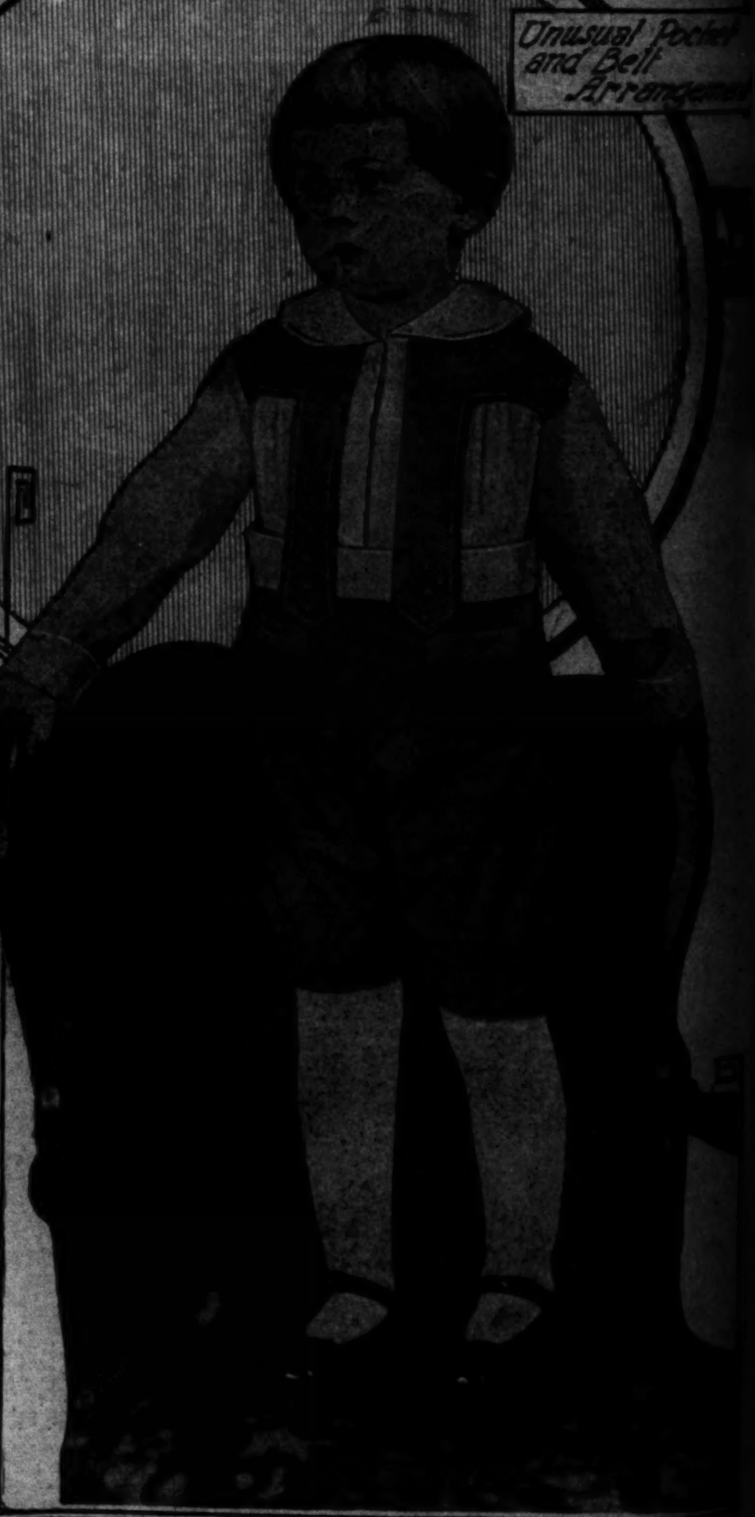
How Smocking can be Used On the Boy's Suit



Pleasing Way to Unite Blouse and Trousers

EVERY mother's son wants to be a man, and he objects strenuously to any attempt a woman makes to dress him in any style that savors of femininity. Experience or observation will show that this is true of the youngest lad, and therefore a mother has to be very careful in her selection of styles for her young hopeful. Sometimes it is a problem to find the right style or to get variety, but this summer offers much help along this line, as can be noted in the models shown.

A very simple suit is the green-and-white one consisting of a white percale blouse and green chambray trousers. There is just the amount of smocking introduced on the blouse to give it decoration without making it too feminine in appearance. The wide belt of percale is a noteworthy feature.

Will piping ever lose its popularity? It seems not, and it is just as suitable for boys' clothes as for the clothes of grown-ups. Proof of this statement is to be found in the buff linen suit piped with brown linen. The manner in which the yoke extends in pointed tabs down the front makes for individuality. The pleated blouse is a pleasing contrast to the first model described, which is a strictly shirtwaist fashion.

The extended yoke idea is again introduced on the blue-and-white model, and is successful in uniting the two pieces forming the suit. The blue portion is of linen, while lawn forms the main part of the blouse and the bands at the top of the pockets.

The woman who claims that little boys cannot be dressed as attractively as little girls should glance at the pink-and-white suit with its unusual pocket and belt arrangement. The little revers and the outstanding collar are details that add to the attractiveness of the model. Attention is drawn to the hat which the little fellow wears. Could anything be more suitable for the little man's head and for sunny days? The mushroom shape is always a safe selection when one is in doubt. Just by way of a change, the one side can be turned up when the wearer or the mother so desires.

Another type of jacket suit is that of white linen. The side fastening not only breaks the monotony but it balances the important pocket, which is made conspicuous by a band of blue linen. Blue linen is also used for the collar and for the bands on the cuffs, belt and bottom of the pants.

LA REPUBLICA ARGENTINA

Datos Generales. Por el Dr. J. Ziegner-Uriburu.

NUESTRA gran hermana del Sud está situada entre los 20 grados y 55 grados 30 minutos de latitud sud, y entre los 54 grados y 73 grados 30 minutos de longitud al Oeste de Greenwich con una área de 1,153,418 millas cuadradas. Su población según los últimos cálculos es de nueve millones de habitantes.

La República Argentina recorre 34 grados de latitud más o menos, por lo tanto presenta una gran variedad de climas, desde el tropical en el extremo norte hasta el casi ártico en el extremo sud. La mayor proporción de su terreno tiene el clima propio de la zona templada. La fértil pampa que se extiende del Atlántico hacia el pie de los Andes ofrece magnífico pastaje para millones de cabezas de ganado vacuno, lanar y caballar. Todos los cereales, especialmente trigo, maíz, avena, etc., etc., se cultivan en grandes cantidades, así como alfalfa, caña de azúcar, tabaco, algodón, arroz, uva, etc., etc. Sus montañas contienen oro, plata y cobre, y depósitos de petróleo se han encontrado últimamente.

Más de la tercera parte de su territorio es arable y por lo tanto utilizable para la agricultura; otra tercera parte es especialmente adaptable para la cría de ganado; el resto del país está cubierto por grandes bosques, lagos, ríos, montañas y ciudades, o por ahora se le considera árido y improductivo.

De sus productos, los de agricultura y ganadería ocupan el primer lugar. Más ó menos sesenta millones de acres hay bajo cultivo de las cuales diez y siete y medio millones se dedican al trigo; cuatro y medio millones a la semilla de linaza; más de diez millones al maíz; y en el resto se cultiva caña de azúcar, alfalfa, arroz, uva, patatas y otros vegetales y frutas. El último censo demuestra que hay en el país enormes cantidades de ganado, 29,000,000 de cabezas de ganado vacuno, 9,000,000 de caballos, 500,000 mulas 300,000 burros, 80,000,000 de cabezas de ganado lanar, 4,000,000 de cabras y más o menos 3,000,000 de cerdos. Es de advertir que la República Argentina produce hoy iguales animales a los mejores del mundo.

Las cosechas se levantan en la Argentina justamente durante una época contraria a la de los Estados Unidos; el trigo se cosecha en Noviembre y el resto de sus productos en el mes de Diciembre.

Las industrias nacionales están en relación directa con sus productos, por ejemplo; siendo la producción de leche muy grande, las fábricas de mantequilla, de queso, cremerías, etc., etc., han desarrollado una producción enorme. Hay en la República 1259 establecimientos de esta clase con una producción de 35,000,000 de libras de crema, 20,000,000 de libras de mantequilla, y 12,000,000 de libras de queso. La exportación de carnes y ganado en pie ha tomado proporciones gigantescas, sabido es que la Argentina fué el primer país que exportó carnes congeladas a Europa. Antiguamente se salaba la carne, no se conocía el procedimiento de frigorífico, de manera que los antiguos "saladeros" se substituyen hoy por "frigoríficos." La industria azucarera ha tomado un incremento muy grande, llegando su producción a cerca de 230,000 toneladas, su cultivo se hace en su gran mayoría en la provincia de Tucumán. Vinos de calidad superior se obtienen de la uva de la provincias de Mendoza, San Juan, Rioja, Salta y otras, más de 250,000 acres de tierra se dedican al cultivo de la parra.

El comercio extranjero de la Argentina llega a sumas cuantiosas, a pesar de la situación anormal del mercado mundial a causa de la guerra, el año de 1916 importó y exportó por valor de casi 800,000,000 de pesos oro, suma extraordinaria si se toma en cuenta la población del país.

En toda la república hay más de 22,000 millas de vía férrea, colocándola entre los países más avanzados del mundo; esta progresiva y culta nación realizó tiempo ha, que los ferrocarriles le eran indispensables para su desarrollo y sin vacilar ha seguido un plan de construcción por el cual las líneas convergen del interior hacia ciertos puntos del este con salida a sus ríos y costas del mar.

La república está en comunicación diaria con todos los países del mundo, líneas de vapores francesas, inglesas, alemanas, austriacas, belgas, españolas, italianas, suecas, noruegas, danesas, holandesas, brasileras, etc., etc., mantienen contacto continuo con los grandes puertos de Europa y América; en la ciudad de Buenos Aires hay cincuenta agencias de vapores para el exterior. Más de 135,000 buques se han registrado en un sólo año, en los puertos Argentinos, representando un tonelaje de cincuenta millones de toneladas. Diariamente entran vapores de pasajeros de puertos europeos y salen para ellos. Con Nueva York hay comunicación cada dos semanas. Es de esperar que después de la guerra se modifique ésto. Las naciones de este hemisferio deben establecer líneas de vapores propias para evitar en el futuro la situación tan difícil en que nos hemos encontrado desde el año de 1914.

La República Argentina es una de las cinco naciones de este hemisferio que ha adoptado el sistema de gobierno republicano representativo federal, su Constitución data del año 1853, la que con pocas modificaciones rige hoy. El Presidente y Vice-Presidente son electos para un período de seis años siendo su reelección para el período inmediato prohibida por la Constitución. Ocho Ministros Secretarios de Estado forman el gabinete.

Buenos Aires es la capital de la república, su población de más de 1,700,000 habitantes hace que ella sea la ciudad más importante de la América Latina y la segunda del mundo Latino. Está situada sobre la margen derecha del Río de la Plata, cubre una área de 82 millas cuadradas, y es por lo tanto mayor que Paris, Berlin o Viena, pero menor que Nueva York.

Buenos Aires es sin duda una de las ciudades más cosmopolitas en el mundo; entre sus habitantes hay 575,000 extranjeros. El turista que ve la ciudad por primera vez admira sus anchas calles con un alumbrado admirable y superior limpieza, admira la belleza de sus edificios, y sobre todo la actividad de su pueblo. En la ciudad hay noventa y siete parques y plazas, treinta y cuatro mercados, veintiocho grandes teatros, sin contar desde luego con un sinnúmero de cinematógrafos que en sí son grandes edificios. Cuatro compañías de carros eléctricos con 435 millas de vía recorren la ciudad, y para remover la congestión que ocasiona un tráfico tan grande se ha construido el ferrocarril subterráneo que fué inaugurado en 1913. Además hay en la ciudad un registro con 53,000 vehículos, de los cuales más de 6000 son automóviles. Más de 600 diarios y periódicos se publican en la ciudad, de los cuales cien de ellos representan las colonias extranjeras. Las aguas corrientes, compañías de gas y de electricidad se han construido de acuerdo con los adelantos más modernos; su policía y su cuerpo de bomberos son modelos de eficacia; los diferentes factores intelectuales como museos, galerías de arte, escuelas públicas y bibliotecas son edificios suntuosos; la vida social representada por sus clubs y sociedades son la admiración de todo aquel que visita esta gran ciudad. Los hoteles equipados con el lujo y elegancia modernos colocan a Buenos Aires a la par de las grandes capitales del mundo.

La población de Buenos Aires es casi completamente de origen europeo, por lo tanto sus costumbres son europeas, el aspecto de la ciudad es moderno, habiendo perdido la característica de las ciudades españolas antiguas que se ven tanto en la América del Sud.

La moneda argentina es el peso; lo hay de oro y de papel, esta condición puede producir confusión en la mente de aquel que no conoce bien la diferencia. El peso oro es la unidad adoptada para las transacciones financieras y para los reportes del gobierno; este peso oro tiene un valor fijo de $0.965 (oro de Estados Unidos.) El peso papel es la unidad para transacciones comerciales, para el pago de cuentas de hoteles, para hacer compras en las tiendas, etc., etc.; se le llama el peso moneda nacional o papel; este peso papel tiene una relación legalmente fijada con el peso oro, de manera que un peso papel vale 44 centavos oro, como casi no hay fluctuación en el cambio extranjero puede calcularse que el peso papel tiene un valor de 43 centavos oro de Estados Unidos.

Para conveniencia de aquellos que deseen hacer un viaje a la República Argentina, ya sea por negocio o placer, nos permitimos darles los siguientes datos, dejando así contestadas las numerosas preguntas que se nos hace sobre el particular. De Nueva York salen vapores regularmente que van directamente a Buenos Aires, tocando puertos brasileros, la travesía se hace en 24 días; ahora durante los meses de verano en la Argentina, cuando aquí es invierno, es posible ir vía Panama por la costa del Pacífico desembarcando en Valparaíso, puerto chileno, y cruzando los Andes, en ferrocarril; este viaje puede hacerse en casi el mismo tiempo. No puede especificarse cual es la mejor época para visitar la República Argentina; los meses de invierno, que son allí Junio, Julio y Agosto, ofrecen al viajero grandes atractivos de carácter social y espectáculos teatrales de gran mérito artístico, mientras que los de verano, que son Diciembre, Enero y Febrero, comparativamente quietos en la ciudad de Buenos Aires, ofrecen oportunidad de ver las carreras, exposiciones de ganadería, playas de mar, etc., etc. La aduana no ofrece dificultades, el examen de equipajes se hace con rapidez y cortesía, los empleados son muy liberales con el viajero. La mayor parte de los hoteles están situados cerca del centro de la ciudad y no muy distantes de los diques, a donde el viajero encuentra carruajes o automóviles para transportarse al punto que desee. Ultimamente se ha publicado una guía en inglés; en todos los hoteles, tiendas, bancos, etc., etc., se habla el inglés, de tal suerte que no hay dificultad para aquel que no conoce el idioma español; los ferrocarriles publican sus horarios en inglés para facilitar al viajero su estadía en la República.

La educación es obligatoria y en todas sus ramas está a la altura de las naciones más adelantadas, baste decir que el mantenimiento de la educación pública representa al gobierno un desembolso del doce por ciento de sus gastos totales.

No hay duda que la República Argentina es la nación más adelantada y próspera en la América Latina, ello lo prueba su comercio que en tiempos normales llega a la enorme suma de 800,000,000 de pesos oro; en esta época, por razón de la guerra europea, completamente anormal y con la dificultad de transporte, la Argentina ha exportado en los primeros nueve meses del año de 1916 más de 350,000,000 de pesos oro e importado más de 150,000,000 de igual moneda.

Compulsory Military Instruction in South America.

BY DR. J. ZIEGNER-URIBURU.

IT IS well known that in many European countries military instruction is compulsory, and those who have studied this matter with some care are unanimous in their opinion, namely, that there is no other more efficient system to discipline the body and the intelligence of the boys. Military instruction is not only convenient in the most simple details of the intelligence of the body, for instance, the mode of living a regular life, or the necessary watchfulness to hear a question and answer it immediately, but also because it contributes to the acquisition of a just estimation of the rules of hygiene and of discipline which must constitute part of our social relations. The truth involved in the idea, that civilization advances more rapidly in those countries where military instruction has been more generalized, cannot be questioned.

Military instruction and the results have been highly satisfactory; it must be understood that the South American governments do not follow this idea with the manifest purpose of inculcating the spirit of militarism in their plans of education.

It is necessary to recognize that the military school affords an education which cannot be obtained in any other way, its results being highly beneficial; as an example we may mention the military college founded in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in the year 1889, shortly after the establishment of the republic. This college was created by Congress for the purpose of educating the sons of the officers of the army and navy. The rules and direction of this educational institution are absolutely of a military character and nevertheless many of the students have followed scientific careers such as medicine, law, engineering, etc. Anyone who has seen the duties with which the students have to comply must recognize the great benefits to be derived from such teachings and the healthy influence those excellent inculcated maxims and principles must exercise upon them all their lives.

There is another very interesting example. The Argentine Republic established, years ago, a nautical college on board the especially built schoolship Presidente Sarmiento, which takes the students around the world. During the long voyage strict military discipline is maintained; outside of the theoretical studies the students acquire practical knowledge which undoubtedly is of great benefit for their future lives.

The military school of Quito, Ecuador, furnishes us with another example in favor of the importance of an education in which discipline plays the important role. This school was created by act of Congress with the purpose of stimulating in the youth of the country respect for discipline, an indispensable factor in all the functions and acts of the twentieth century. The professors take special pains in explaining to the students the value of education based on discipline, the respect to authorities, and they prepare them for the general duties of life.

It is not only true that Latin Americans adapt themselves naturally to military discipline, but it is also true that the different nations have rapidly learned the lessons it teaches, and have applied them in their private affairs.

It was therefore a rather easy problem for the Latin American nations to adopt years ago the compulsory military service; in some of them, the armies are of considerable strength; the Argentine and the Chilean army are undoubtedly the best organized and most efficient armies in America.

The Argentine army is composed of the standing one and the reserves. Under the law, military (or navy) service is compulsory; all able-bodied citizens must serve from their twentieth to their forty-fifth year, active service being for one year. The total establishment of the army is 25,000 men. The Army of the Reserve is composed of all citizens who have received military training and every citizen up to the age of 40 years belongs to it; the Territorial Guard is made up of those between 40 and 45 years of age and mobilized only in case of war. Under this system the Argentine Republic has a trained army for immediate field service of 260,000 men. Naturalized citizens are exempt from military duty for a term of ten years.

The officers are trained in the military school in San Martin, and after a few years of service in the regular army they are sent to the war college.

Obligatory military service was established in Chile in 1900. The period of service originally lasted one year, but can be extended. The active army is not far short of 20,000 men, and the war strength is about 300,000 men. There are a military school where cadets are trained who can graduate as sublieutenants; a cavalry school; an artillery school, and a school for non-commissioned officers. Besides these, a staff college is organized for captains under 37 years of age.

THE REAL ARTHUR JAMES BALFOUR.

An Intimate Study. By A Special Contributor.

ARTHUR JAMES BALFOUR, dean of England's elder statesmen and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, sees in the present alliance between the English speaking nations of the world the culmination of a great hope.

This great English Unionist has participated in every epoch-making international conference since and including the Berlin conference of 1878 that followed the close of the Russo-Turkish War. He was a ranking member of the secret councils that drafted the alliances that bind France, Russia and England as a triple Entente.

There are many who believe that he regards the entrance of the United States into the Entente as the crowning diplomatic triumph of his long and brilliant career.

Arthur James Balfour possesses the most mystifying personality of his generation. Here are two of his characteristic utterances during his recent visit:

"There are truths of political ethics which the bitter experiences of war are burning into the souls of all freedom loving peoples."

"The object of the commission is to bring about a lasting peace by the only means that can assure it, namely, a successful war."

In the first, the scion of four centuries of imperialism is uttering a sentiment which exhales an essence of liberty, fraternity and equality. In the second comes the declaration that peace is born of strength, not weakness, and that the only way to secure an enduring peace is to crush the opposition.

Strange anomalies have been produced by the present world struggle between democracy and imperialism; but none is more marked than that of this descendant of the proud race of the Cecils, this product of Anglo-Saxon aristocracy who traces his lineage back jointly to Maitland and Cecil, the two most ancient imperialists that the world has known—no greater anomaly has been produced in earth, sky or air than this great imperialist leader marshaling the forces and fighting the battles of liberty.

Yet Washington and Lafayette were the products of the civilization that has produced this great elder statesman. He has made his pilgrimage to the tomb of his grandfather's arch enemy and has paid a glowing tribute jointly to the memory of Washington and Lafayette. Destiny may have reserved for him the completion of the work they so nobly inaugurated.

But the life of Arthur James Balfour has been an anomaly during forty-five years of public service. He is a living problem, possessing a personality composed of seemingly irreconcilable elements; he is an imperialist who preaches democracy, a skeptic who defends and teaches theology, a politician who looks upon politics with unrepressed disdain, a lover of ease and luxury who leads the life of a Spartan, professed Unionist he holds one of the highest offices within the gift of a Liberal ministry.

Summing up a comprehensive review of his remarkable career Augustine Filon exclaims in the "Revue des Deux Mondes," "If he is sincere, what an enigma, and if he is not, what a comedy!"

After a careful study of this complex character, however, the great French author and critic asserts that:

"To me he is sincere, more sincere than most of the men of state whom I have had the good or the ill fortune to encounter. . . . He has doubted too much not to be sincere when he affirms. I see in him a man, who, fighting against his destiny, finally yields to it, but in directing it."

Caring little for public preferment, Mr. Balfour has held the highest offices to which an Englishman not of royal blood can attain. During his long parliamentary career he has refused repeatedly to accept a title and sit in the House of Lords. This distinction was offered to him before the power of the upper house of Parliament was broken. He replied with mocking irony:

"I am not yet ready to enter an old folks' home."

When proffered a premiership in 1902 he accepted it with a yawn and relinquished it at the first opportunity. Self-confessed aristocrat and reactionary, he has represented for more than ten years a London labor district in the House of Commons.

Handsome, elegant, refined, possessor of princely estates, he is a confirmed bachelor.

ARTHUR JAMES BALFOUR, HEAD OF THE BRITISH COMMISSION TO THE UNITED STATES.

Three times he has retired definitely from politics and three times he has been called back in times of crisis of the British empire. Each time this call has come not from his party associates but from his political and party enemies. To many his consent to make the trip to the United States at this time is an enigma. But some of the more discerning, viewing his present act in the light of the past, believe that he has taken this opportunity to effect, as the crowning act of his long life in the public service, a British-American alliance.

Few Americans are aware that this remarkable man is the real father of the present Entente. It was during his leadership in the House of Commons that the alliance of England, Russia and France was effected.

It was Balfour's great constructive policy that turned England from her "splendid isolation" to strengthen the power and the prestige of the British empire through effecting advantageous alliances. When Great Britain and the United States were standing almost at sword's points over the Venezuelan controversy, Arthur James Balfour delivered in the House of Commons a noted address that did much to relax the tense feeling between the two great English speaking nations and to discourage hostile demonstrations by either.

Here is an extract from that address which reads as though it might have been uttered on the occasion of his reception here in March; but it dates to January 15, 1896.

"It cannot but be that those whose national roots go down to the same past as ours, who share our language, our literature, our laws, our religion—everything that makes a nation great—it cannot but be that a time will come when they will feel that they and we have a common duty to perform, a common office to fulfill among the nations of the world."

The Balfours have in their veins the blood of many old Scotch houses. One of his ancestors was Maitland, Secretary of State under Mary Stuart. His mother Lady Blanche Gascoyne Cecil, descends from the famous minister of Queen Elizabeth, ancestor of the modern Salisburys. It was Maitland and Cecil who plotted together for the union of the kingdoms of England and Scotland. They have been christened inventors of imperialism and, consequently, the two most ancient imperialists that the world has known. Predestination traverses a tangled path to bring this scion of imperialism with votive offerings to the temple of the Goddess of Liberty.

Arthur James Balfour was born in that eventful year, 1848, year of political tempests that gave birth to Socialism, amidst storms of revolution that threatened Europe. He drew his first breath on the princely domains of the House of Douglas, where, to those who can converse with the rocks in their own tongue, the very stones of Dunbar repeat [illegible] legends of the past. There the atmosphere is saturated with tradition and authority.

Lady Blanche named him Arthur after the great Duke of Wellington and from his mother's breast he imbibed the traditions of English sovereignty and the faith of the Church of England.

But Lady Blanche was a Spartan mother. At the time when the cotton industry was menaced and suffering was great among the working classes in Lancashire, she decided to instruct her children in the most humble functions of the household. Arthur waxed his own slippers without enthusiasm and ate, with less enthusiasm still, the deplorable cooking of his sister.

This economy may not have mitigated the misery of the laboring classes during the cotton crisis, but Lady Blanche was setting an excellent example in teaching these children, born in luxury, to work with those who work and suffer with those who suffer.

Young Balfour's school days were those of the sons of the old English landed gentry. He entered Eton where he was fag for Lord Landsdowne and comrade of Lord Rosebery. Forty years later, Landsdowne and Balfour were the leaders of the Unionist party and directing the opposition, the one in the House of Lords the other in the Commons.

At the age of 18 Balfour entered Cambridge University; but he did not chose the aristocratic and classic Kings College, preferred generally by the Etonians; he established himself in Trinity College, the great propagating station of scientists, materialists, skeptics and atheists.

It is interesting to speculate on the intellectual struggle that must have taken place in that aristocratic mind. Balfour was not only an eager searcher for the truth, he was an English gentleman, a landed proprietor. He owed to his tenants an example of faith in the future of the race, in the destiny of English society and, highest of all, an example of religious belief. It was the struggle of his intellectual independence with social responsibility. He was in that dilemma which produces so many hypocrites.

When he left Cambridge in 1870 he was a polished skeptic. In appearance and manner he was a dilettante, one content to live on the margin of life without seeking to penetrate the great volume itself, content to exist without seeking to solve the problem of existence.

Music was one of the dominating passions of his youth. He found in the tones of the piano an expression of an elan of spirit that words cannot convey. At his country home in Whittinghame he kept a piano in his office which adjoined his sleeping apartments. He shrank from playing in company; but guests at the manor would hear at midnight weird strains of classical music emanating from the office of their host. Music seemed to furnish an aperture through which his soul escaped to the infinite.

It was at this time that fate removed one who had been both mother and mentor; but her place was taken by his charming, scholarly sister, Miss Alice Balfour. So great was his brotherly affection that in all the years that have followed he could never permit another to take her place either in his affections or in his home. He shunned alike the titles of husband and lord and remains today a commoner and a bachelor, his sister still looking after his home both in London and at his country estates.

Space is too limited in a single article to follow in detail Balfour's political and literary career. In literature as in politics his life presents strange anomalies. His first article was written soon after he left Cmbridge. It was a criticism appearing in the Edinburgh Review on sacred music. He was a great admirer of Handel and the article is an appreciation of that master's talent.

"Defense of Philosophic Doubt," appeared in 1879. One's first impression is that the book is an attack on religious beliefs. It is a book of one who questions and who defends the right to question all religious and scientific phenomena; but it is not the writing of an atheist. In this serious but elegant brochure Mr. Balfour

THOSE WHO COME KNOCKING AT MY DOOR.

Confidential. By Chester Geppert Wallis.

IN THE beginning let me state that there is something peculiar about me—I don't know whether it is my looks or some subtle vibration from my astral body—some weird, abstract attraction that metaphysicians like to talk about—whatever it is, I solemnly swear that I do not encourage it. I try my best to look cold, forbidding and sensible, lately I have taken to wearing flat heeled shoes, Norfolk tweed suits and straight sailors, but all to no purpose. No matter how I dress, or what I do, or where I am, everyone, the man-servant, the maid-servant and the stranger that is within my gates, the butcher, the baker, the candle-stick maker and the lovelorn maiden of bashful sixteen, all of them take one good look at me and without the slightest encouragement or provocation, draw a long breath and recite the whole story of their lives, pouring into my unwilling ears all their aches, pains and aspirations.

I hadn't noticed this tendency so much in the little town where I had grown up, for there I knew nearly everyone and was genuinely interested in their affairs, but when we moved to California, where everyone is diligently searching for someone who knows someone "back East," it became positively ludicrous.

For instance—we had been here but a short time, I was standing on a down town street corner, waiting for a car, when a big, burly diamond in the rough accosted me gently. "Isn't it wonderful?" he enthused, "Just look at the passing throngs, there are people here from all over the world, of every nationality. Why, there are people here in this town from Clarksburg, W. Va."

"Yes," I ventured.

"'Safact," he affirmed. "Say, where're you from?"

Of course, I don't expect you to believe this, but Melville Davisson Post is undoubtedly right when he says that fiction is never so surprising as truth. As it happened, we had just come from Clarksburg where we had been visiting my brother and I made the fatal mistake of telling the diamond so. He was promptly overwhelmed with amazement and in the three minutes before the car arrived, he told me all about his business, the farm and the oil they had found on it, his wife, their two daughters and why they had come West. Somehow that always seems to need an explanation. I breathed a sigh of relief when the car appeared and sank into a seat near the front under a sign that admonished me in large, black letters not to talk the motorman. I didn't.

At the next corner, a small woman, swathed in a billowing feather boa, carefully got off the car backwards and was nearly run over by an automobile. The motorman looked around, singled me out of the crowd and voiced his disgust.

"Ain't that a fool trick? My wife got off the car backwards last week and fell flat on her back. I told her it was good for her. Some wimmen don't seem to have the sense the Lord gave a billy-goat. She's pretty sensible about most things though. Now—" And he told me all about his wife and why they had come West and all about their home in Colorado—you know, out here, Colorado, is the far and effete East.

When he had finished—he seemed to expect no reply—a large, well-dressed woman across the aisle, feelingly advanced the information that she also was from Colorado. The motorman evinced no interest and inasmuch as she could see only the back of his head, she told me all about it, winding up with an account of a Hallowe'en party that had been given at their apartment-house some months before.

Do you see what I mean? This is a small sample of what occurs regularly. There were other people on the corner for the diamond to talk to, the car was full of people to whom the denizens of Colorado might have unburdened their sorrows and joys. Why pick on me who had said nary a word nor looked nary a look to start them? And it isn't a case of propinquity either. I have had kind old ladies change their seats in the street cars to tell me how their daughters' husbands are getting along in business and what cute things their grandchildren do.

But I meant to tell you only of the people who come to my door.

We live in a secluded section of the city, on the heights overlooking the bay and several blocks away from the car line. At first we congratulated ourselves that we should be free from agents, peddlers and beggars, but alas, we seem to have settled near the outskirts of the peddler's reservation. They come in flocks, in droves, and besiege us at all hours.

I was messing around in a pan of bread one morning (I hate sticky dough,) when the door bell rang. Holding my hands outspread, I opened the door with my elbow and confronted a tall, Lincolnesque gentleman who, in measured words, informed me, politely but firmly, that unless I purchased several of his patent gas savers for my kitchen range my husband would soon be bankrupt. He told me a great deal about gas that I didn't know and I was patiently waiting for a chance to get in a negative word or so when he took a good look at me and began. I have grown to know that look and knew what was coming.

The poor fellow was from Kansas, that accounted for a lot; but I don't hold that against him, for of course he couldn't help it. He was a college graduate and had to come west for his health; there seemed to be some doubt as to the authenticity of his left lung. He couldn't get work and faced starvation, all but the gas savers. There was a clever little girl in Kansas, too, he told me all about her. I felt truly sorry for him and would have bought a saver if it hadn't been that my hands were doughy and all the money I had was in my new, pale gray leather purse. Who was it wrote about destinies hanging on something or other?

Gentle reader (I hope you are gentle,) do you know Southern California? Do you know that everyone out here is either a college graduate or a celebrity or both? Why I know any number of kind-hearted women who do their washing in order to give their maids time to dash off a scenario or finish the last act of a play. One of my friends has a maid who insists upon the use of the Victrola two afternoons a week in order to practice aesthetic dancing. But that's nothing, our milk boy is only 15 and has already published a book of poems. He bids you "Leave the east with its storms terrific, and come and dwell by the calm Pacific."

But I digress—back to the door!

On a bright, sunny morning when the roses were blooming madly and the merry meadow larks were barking at the circling aeroplanes overhead—enveloped in a sweater and with my sewing basket, I followed the sun from one end of the front porch to the other, striving to get warm.

A dapper young man in a checked suit, red tie and tan shoes came up the walk and addressed me cheerfully and hopefully. After a few tentative remarks anent the weather and the war, he begged me to accept as a gift, a large aluminum percolator. I was on the point of gratefully accepting when he handed me a pencil and a slip of paper, requesting me to "sign here." The slip was merely a contract for 200 pounds of coffee to be delivered at my convenience.

"But," I objected, "my husband sells coffee, that is his business."

"Oh, that's all right, madam," (do you hate to be madamed?) "We'll just play a little joke on him."

Well, I didn't buy his coffee but what do you think that young caricature told me? You can believe it if you want to. Flatly, I don't.

He said he was a writer out hunting for human interest stories and that his father owned half of the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco.

Do people who own St. Francis hotels wear red neckties or do they permit their sons to wear them?

A few minutes after he had gone, a pallid youth shambled awkwardly up to the porch and in a sing-song voice, chanted a long list of diseases and ailments that could be cured with the liver pills that he was selling. Provoked at the former encounter, I was determined that he should have no chance to tell me his real occupation. I eyed him sternly and said,

"Young man, don't you know that it is a very wicked thing to sell patent medicines?"

"No mam," he quavered, "these pills—"

"Silence," I said theatrically, "I am a Christian Scientist and know that all medicine is error. Be gone, young man, and seek a better occupation."

Bewildered, the poor boy made a Uriah Heepish exit and passed out of my life forever.

Please, careful connoi, never divulge what I am about to tell. If my next, traitorous remarks about the weather should ever be repeated here in California, I may be put in the stocks or quietly led out of town in the dead of night.

I at last gave up pretending that I was warm enough in the sunshine and went, shivering, indoors to light my trusty oil stove and hover over it.

When I was nearly thawed out, the door bell rang. There at my humble portal stood a buxom lass of scarce three hundred pounds—she was a maid to all the country dear and passing fat, with forty pounds a year. I gathered from her first words that there was no doubt whatever as to the authenticity of her lungs. In a deep, resonant voice, she told me what a God-send her particular brand of washing powder was to poor, down-trodden housewives. All I had to do was to buy a box, soak all the soiled clothes in the house in a weak solution of the powder and take them out the next morning, snow white and immaculate.

I protested meekly that I sent the laundry out.

"Then," she averred rhetorically, "you can use it for dishes, cut glass, cleaning windows, woodwork, chandeliers, bathtubs, mirrors, sinks—say honey," she interrupted herself, "are you from Kentucky?"

I admitted that many years ago I had been born there but didn't remember much about it.

"I knew it—I knew it, honey. I said to myself, the minute I laid eyes on you that you were from Kentucky. I'm coming right in and talk to you."

Were you ever run over by a steam roller, lenient listener? Neither was I, but I am cognizant of all of the sensations.

"Now," said the Amazon, easing herself, creakingly into our largest rocker (I tried to think where I had put the shoe horn.) "Now, I'm from Cynthiana and am well acquainted with all the prominent families in the State." I was worried for I knew that I should never be able to prove my social status, whatever. My parents moved from Kentucky when I was six months old or thereabouts and I couldn't remember the names of any of my friends or acquaintances there. However, I soon found that there was no cause for worry for the Portly Powder Peddler neither expected nor encouraged replies.

"I do not have to canvass this way for a living," she was off, "I am an elocutionist by profession and I have held thousands spellbound by the hour. I know 5000 quotations from the best writers, 2500 short poems and fifty long ones, all by heart. Two years ago I spoke to an audience of 2500 people at Mammoth Cave. You should see me, honey, when I give a recital. I wear a salmon pink dress, cut low, with a black lace

HISTORICAL FACTS CONCERNING COFFEE.

Origin of its Use. By A Brazilian Planter.

STROLLING the other day through the streets of Los Angeles I was struck by the number of those attractive and convenient restaurants called "cafeterias," which are found in such number and so well organized and conducted as in no other city of the United States.

What has puzzled me always is, why this form of restaurant should have been given the name of "cafe-teria," indicating that coffee (called in the Latin languages "cafe") would constitute the main item of refreshments, which is by no means the case. And being a son of sunny Brazil, which leads the world in producing coffee, I feel a certain pride that our national product, the popular "Rubiacea," which has made Brazil famous, as the beer did Milwaukee, should have loaned its name to the Angel City's culinary establishments.

This leads me to reflect upon the early history of coffee, and brings back to memory the opposition and prohibitory attacks it had to overcome in order to gain a footing as an item in our domestic economy. And how, gradually and persistently, it won its popularity and intruded itself upon us, so that it is now in universal demand and there is today hardly a country in the world where it has not become one of the daily household necessities, among the rich as well as the poor.

It is quite an interesting story, little known, I believe. And as the food problem is at the present time attracting such attention, it may be opportune to relate how the use of coffee originated and found its way into our households.

How the Coffee Got its Name.

Coffee takes its name from Kaffa, a district of Abyssinia where it came from and where it still grows in a wild state. The story goes that in the fifteenth century an Arab herder of goats, having noticed that his animals, after browsing on the leaves and berries of certain bushes, became exceedingly lively and playful, was prompted by curiosity to chew a quantity of these berries. He found them of pleasing taste and that they had the same refreshing and stimulating effect upon him. Having told other herders of this, they tried them in various ways, until it was finally discovered that the best results could be obtained by making a strong infusion of the roasted beans in boiling water, which yielded an aromatic beverage of pleasing taste, which greatly refreshed and stimulated.

The use of this beverage spread throughout Arabia and presently pilgrims returning from Mecca and Medina brought it into Egypt. They called it "kahwah," or "cahue," and it became very popular. From Egypt it passed to Constantinople, and here it struck its first snag. It aroused the animosity of fanatic "mulahs," or priests, who became incensed against the newly-opened coffee houses because they proved such an attraction to the faithful that they neglected to attend the "moshees" for the prescribed prayers. They discovered a passage in the Al-koran, the Mohammedan bible, declaring the internal use of coal or carbonized matter as unclean and, applying it to roasted coffee, they induced the Grand Mufti to issue a proclamation forbidding its use.

Bone-dry Prohibition.

At this time took place the greatest successful prohibition movement on record in history. The Al-koran, as is known, forbids the faithful the use of alcoholic beverages, but this prohibition had not been enforced in the early times of Mohammedanism, and the use of wine, although not permitted officially, had at least been tolerated by the early Sultans, the heads of the Mohammedan religion.

Sultan Amurad III, however, more fanatic and intolerant than his predecessors, issued an edict absolutely forbidding the use of wine or any alcoholic beverages. The faithful clamored for a substitute, and coffee being the most popular, its use was again tolerated, until the succeeding Sultan, Soliman II, authorized, in 1554, the opening of public coffee-houses in Constantinople, and their popularity and number rapidly increased.

Venetian merchants returning from the Orient were the first to bring coffee into Christian Europe. The first public coffeehouse, opened in Venice on St. Mark's Square, in 1615, was called "Cafe Florian," and, curious to say, it is still in existence.

From Venice the use of coffee spread over Italy and reached Rome, where it again became the victim of religious fanaticism, which almost caused its banishment from Christendom.

Fanatic priests appealed to Pope Clement VIII to have the use of coffee forbidden among Christians, denouncing it as an invention of Satan. They claimed that Satan, having forbidden his followers, the infidel Moslems, the use of wine, no doubt because it was sanctified by Christ and used in the Holy Communion, had given them as a substitute this hellish black brew of his they called coffee, and therefore for Christians to drink this coffee subjected them to the risk of falling into a trap of Satan to endanger their souls.

The Pope, made curious, desired to see this Satan's drink, and they had some made and brought it to him. The aroma of it was so pleasant and inviting that the Pope was tempted to try a cup, and after drinking it he exclaimed: "Why, this Satan's drink is so delicious, it would be a pity to let the infidels have the exclusive use of it. We will fool Satan by baptizing it and making it a truly Christian beverage."

Thus, whatever harmfulness its opponents try to attribute to coffee, the fact remains that it has been baptized and proclaimed unharmful, and a "truly Christian beverage," by His Holiness the Pope.

It was, however, in England that coffee met its Waterloo and was banished for quite a long time. And not through religious fanaticism this time, but through domestic despotism.

Brought to London.

The first coffee had been brought to London from Smyrna by an English merchant named Daniel Edwards, who made his Greek servant Pasqua prepare some every day to offer to the friends who called upon him. The callers, however, became so numerous in consequence of the rapidly-spreading news of this new drink that Edwards, finding his time too much taken up by them, hit upon the plan of opening a public coffee-house and putting it in charge of the servant, Pasqua. It was situated at Newman Court, Cornhill, and was called the "Virginia Coffee-house." It proved such an attraction that soon quite a number of others sprung up all over the city, where the gentlemen of the time congregated and passed the days and the evenings sipping coffee and talking over current events.

This brought about the downfall of these coffee-houses. For, as they, like the saloons of the present day, were not open to ladies, the jealousy and ire of the fair sex was aroused against them. They got together and presented a petition to the Lord Protector Cromwell, which still exists in the archives under the title of "Women's Petition Against Coffee." In this petition they demanded the closing and abolishing of all coffee-houses, claiming that the same kept the husbands away from their business and from their homes and families, and thereby undermined domestic peace and felicity. Moreover, they asserted, the use of this new beverage, coffee, destroyed the strength and vitality of the husbands and rendered them as sterile as the sands of Arabia, from where this accursed beverage originated, and if its use were not forbidden it would reduce the robust English race to a race of miserable pygmies.

To such eloquent denouncement Cromwell had to yield, and in 1674 a law was passed closing all coffee-houses and forbidding the introduction of coffee into England, and it was not until after the reign of Charles II that this prohibition was revoked. It is no doubt on account of this that coffee never became as popular in England as in other countries.

The Sensation of Paris.

To Paris the first coffee was brought by the Turkish Ambassador, Soliman Aga. He invited King Louis XIV and his court to his richly-appointed apartments and had coffee, then unknown to them, served in beautiful porcelain cups by Nubian servants. The novelty created such a sensation that the Turkish Embassy became the rendezvous of the most elegant society and coffee became the favorite court drink.

In 1671 the first public coffee-house in France was opened in Marseilles, and others followed. However, the use of coffee would soon have died out in France on account of the excessively high price charged for the same by the merchants who brought it from the Orient had it not been that other merchants, from St. Malo, sent their ships around the Cape of Good Hope to fetch home several cargoes of coffee direct from Arabia. This broke the monopoly and reduced the price, so that coffee soon became as popular in France as in other countries.

Into the Germanic countries coffee found its way through an incident at the siege of Vienna by the Turks in 1663. The Polish King, John Sobieski, had come with his army to relieve Vienna and had routed the Turks and raised the siege. In the tent of the Pasha was found a large quantity of coffee, which fell as booty to a soldier named Kotschinsky, who had specially distinguished himself. The soldier used the coffee to open a coffee-house in Vienna, and as he employed to make it the Turkish Pasha's own coffee maker, who had been made prisoner and whom he had ransomed, the coffee he served was exceedingly good and he was much patronized. To this day the Vienna coffee-houses have a reputation for the excellence of their coffee.

Use of Coffee Spread.

The use of coffee gradually spread over the rest of Europe. To the Scandinavian countries in the north and to Spain and Portugal in the south, and from Spain it was brought to the West Indies and the Spanish-American colonies. It was from the West Indies that coffee was first introduced into the United States.

Fifty years ago the total annual consumption of coffee in the United States amounted to about one and one-half million bags of 132 pounds each, or 198,000,000 pounds. Today it exceeds 7,000,000 bags, or more or less 925,000,000 pounds.

This short historic sketch of how coffee became an item of importance in the national and domestic economy of nations is suggestive. It is an evidence that it possesses such notable virtues, that in spite of all opposition and hostile attacks, it has imposed itself upon us as one of the necessities of our daily life and at the same time has given rise to important new industries and has become one of the main sources of revenue to those countries that enjoy the conditions necessary to produce it.

Modern Coffee Growing.

As to the practical and modern side of the great coffee industry, the following extract from a letter written by a planter in Chiapas, Mexico, throws an interesting light on methods, the planter is writing to his business associates in Los Angeles.

"We can expect from our first planting, amounting to about 20,500 trees, in two years the first crop. These trees had already this year some blossoms. We cut the trees down to about twenty-five inches from the ground in order to obtain a strong body to the tree. In Chiapas the coffee shrub is educated to become a tree and not allowed to grow beyond eight feet. This restriction is imposed on the coffee tree because, when the plant grows over that height, the difficulties for cultivating increase.

"The question of shade is another very important factor in establishing a coffee plantation. The trees we planted last year have still the natural shade we left of the virgin forest. Most of this shade has to be removed little by little until the mother shade trees become sufficient in height. The forest shade is removed by girdling the trees. The mother trees we find abundantly in the second valley beyond the coffee zone in young forests. It belongs to a species called the Mimosa, of which we have quite a variety on the land. Mimosa trees have a finger-like foliage and keep the grounds of the coffee well covered with fallen leaves so that hardly any grass can come up between the groves. The ashes of the leaves contain about 5 per cent. potash and the roots of the tree have numerous balls containing the valuable nitrogen. This is the ideal mother tree to the coffee."

Queer Sleeping Habits.

STRANGE POSITIONS OF DIFFERENT SLEEPERS.

BY EDWIN TARRISSE.

Most persons probably sleep lying on the right or left side of the body, with the knees drawn up toward the chin; but certain African tribes lie on the back, and let the head, or rather the back of the neck, rest on a bar of wood that is supported on two short pillars.

The elephant, apparently invariably, and the horse, commonly, sleep standing. This is really astonishing. Besides the difficulty of maintaining the balance of the body during long periods of unconsciousness, it would seem that there must be some necessity for resting the muscles of the legs. Cattle usually sleep lying down, and during many hours of the day they lie down.

More curious still, there are creatures that sleep while they hang head downward, suspended by the hind feet. Among these are the bats. The hanging parrots of India and the Malayan region have the same strange habit. In this they differ from all other birds, which invariably sleep with the head turned tailward over the back and the beak thrust in among the feathers between the wing and the body—not actually under the wing, as people generally believe. No satisfactory explanation has ever been offered to account for this queer habit. It is followed even by the penguins, whose feathers are so short they do not completely cover the beak.

Certain birds sleep while they rest on one leg. That curious pose is best seen in long-legged birds, like storks and gulls. Ducks generally sleep on open water; and in order to keep from drifting shoreward, and therefore into the danger zone, they paddle constantly with one foot, so that the body is always circling round the chosen sleeping area. The sloths sleep suspended by their feet, with the head tucked in between the forelegs. The no less remarkable African pottos, or slow lemurs, assume a similar pose, but they attach themselves to a vertical instead of horizontal bough, so that the body rests with the head upward. No animal except man ever sleeps upon its back.

It is commonly supposed that some animals never sleep, but that is because they do not close their eyes. Hares, snakes and fishes are creatures of this sort, but all of them do actually sleep and regularly. Whales and their kin are often spoken of as sleepless creatures, for it is supposed that if they lost consciousness they would promptly drown. As a rule darkness induces sleep, but with many creatures—bats and owls, for example—the opposite is the case. That reversal of the natural order has been brought about by the nature of the animals' feeding habits.

It is difficult to say where sleep begins, and we shall be perhaps nearer the truth if we regard it as universal among living things. In the case of plants, it is caused by darkness, save for certain bacteria and fungi which, like evil spirits, grow under the cover of night.

A Curious Rock Dweller.

One of the strangest creatures known to science is the pholas, or boring clam. When still very minute the animal bores into the sandstone ledges at extreme low water, by means of its sharp shell, which is replaced by secretions as it is worn away. It penetrates the rock to a depth of six or eight inches, and hollows out its burrow as it increases in size.

Shaped roughly like a top, it could not leave its rock dwelling even if it wished to do so. For food, it depends on the animalcules that float in sea water, which it seizes by its long siphon, or tongue.

The pholas is in great demand at the seaside resorts along the Pacific Coast, for its meat is very tender and makes excellent soup. The clams are dislodged in great number from the ledges by the use of dynamite, although it is possible to obtain them with a pick or crowbar.

A coffee pot on the vacuum bottle principle, the lid of which serves as a stopper, has been invented.—[Baltimore Star.

THE CLIPPER SHIPS OF YESTERDAY.

1843--1859. By M. C. Frederick.

THE revival of wooden-ship building is one of the surprises of the war. The activity and haste in our shipyards has not been paralleled since the gold excitement in California landed a vast army of goldseekers in a country without resources—and supplies four or five months away around Cape Horn!

The first ship of which we have record, Noah's Ark, was also built in haste for an emergency. The wood employed was cypress, the Hebrew gopherwood, belonging to the same family as the Douglas fir now supplying our shipyards in the Northwest. That ancient shipyard was perhaps at Babylon, then doubtless a maritime city on the Persian Gulf. The Euphrates being busy and dredgers not in fashion, the gulf would naturally recede, leaving Babylon high and dry—or rather low and wet—just as the silt-bearing Colorado has pushed back the Gulf of California from its well-defined shore line at the foot of San Jacinto Mountain.

That the ancient ship was practical and adapted to its purpose was fully demonstrated by the Mennonite, Peter Jensen, and his Dutch colleagues, who built several arks on a reduced scale. Its proportions of length, breadth and thickness are still considered the best for strength, capacity and stability.

While not exactly a "clipper," if put to the test Noah's ship might have compared favorably with Columbus's outfit, considering the length of time for improvement. The entire fleet is said to have cost $3000, while Columbus was to receive $300 a year, his captains $200 each, and his sailors $2.50 a month. They were seventy-one days crossing the Atlantic. All of which goes to show the slight advancement in maritime interests in the thousands of years since Noah.

Babylonian mariners, when they could not see the shore, turned doves or ravens loose, their flight indicating the direction of land. The Vikings on their voyages carried many ravens for the same purpose, and Alexander is reported to have employed the same kind of a compass. In this respect, at least, Columbus had an advantage.

Shipbuilding in America was inadvertently introduced in 1607—also to meet an emergency. During their first winter, an epidemic of nostalgia, otherwise homesickness, broke out in an English colony near the mouth of the Kennebec; and as an antidote they built a thirty-foot pinnace (lucky they knew how,) and sailed for home.

Within sixty years England "viewed with alarm" the interest of the colonists in shipbuilding. In another half-century New England shipyards had drawn away so many men that London shipwrights complained that there were not enough left to carry on the work. The year Junipero Serra arrived in California the Atlantic Coast launched 389 vessels, nearly a third of them square-riggers. They averaged only 50 tons each and probably the largest was not over 200 tons.

Although for centuries England had been mistress of the seas, France led the nations in modeling and construction, and her luggers were the fastest thing afloat. In the Revolutionary War when France entered into a treaty with the United States, some of her frigates and luggers went into American dry docks, where their lines were carefully taken by enterprising young shipwrights. That year Congress ordered four frigates and three sloops of war, and a great number of privateers suddenly appeared along the Atlantic Coast, most of them copied from the French vessels.

The "Baltimore clippers" (modeled after the French luggers,) gained world-wide reputation for speed as privateers during the War of 1812, and later as African slavers—let us hasten to say many of them flying the flags of Portugal and Spain. They were brigs, brigantines and schooners and rarely exceeded 200 tons.

Not long after the close of the Revolutionary War the Spanish flag had reached the port of St. Petersburg and the China seas, and within seven years the ship Columbia, 213 tons, and the sloop Washington, ninety tons, came around the Horn to this coast, where they traded for furs and went on to China, the Columbia returning via Cape of Good Hope and being the first to carry the flag around the world. It was this ship that discovered and gave its name to the Columbia River and won for us the great Northwest with its magnificent forests that are now furnishing timber for our rejuvenated industry of wooden-ship building.

It was in those days that the foundations of several American fortunes were laid. Stephen Girard, the eccentric founder of Girard College, built and owned ships for the China and India trade (1791) that were long the pride of Philadelphia. The Manhattan, 600 tons, built in New York for the same trade, was regarded as a monster and "it took nearly all the deep-water seamen in port to man her (1796.) John Jacob Astor's famous ship Beaver, 427 tons, was launched in 1803.

By 1815 the wars were ended and America had established her rights upon the sea. The following year the celebrated New York and Liverpool (passenger) packets came out. They were from 300 to 500 tons and were the only regular means of communication between the United States and Europe.

The opening of the Erie Canal (1825) made New York the gateway to the United States and the packet ships were in their glory until 1850. They slowly increased in tonnage and speed until the Albert Gallatin (1849) reached 1435 tons. The vessels of the different packet lines often raced across the Atlantic, sometimes for large stakes, and on more than one occasion the passage to Liverpool was made in fourteen days.

In 1832 England, to her own great advantage, did away with that gigantic monopoly, the East India Company, which for more than two centuries had controlled her China and India trade. Just before that important change, three little British schooners had begun carrying opium from India to China. They found it so lucrative that in one year (1833) one of them had sold opium to the value of more than $1,500,000. This attracted the attention of American merchants in China and two of them—we are obliged to admit the truth—put five clipper schooners into the trade, which became known as opium clippers.

By 1837 Britain acknowledged the superiority of the American merchant marine, but did not build her first clipper until two years later, and then only a schooner to compete with the paddle steamer between Aberdeen and London.

Up to the time when the East India Company lost its power, only small American craft had been clipper-built, but that year Isaac McKim of Baltimore had a full grown ship constructed on the same lines as the Baltimore clippers. It proved to be very fast but of small carrying capacity. Though no more were built like it, it furnished a suggestion. Finally (1843) the ideas of John W. Griffith were embodied in a ship called the Rainbow, 750 tons. The extreme clipper had arrived, ushering in a new era.

Among other startling features her bow had concave water lines—"was turned inside out and her whole form contrary to the laws of nature," and the question was whether she would sail. She proved excellent in every way and was the fastest ship in the world. Her second trip to China was made in six months and fourteen days, including two weeks in port. The next ship was faster still.

When the British navigation laws were repealed in 1849 and the carrying trade of Great Britain and her colonies thrown open to all nations, American ships began carrying cargoes of tea from China to England. The first ship to arrive with a cargo of tea was the Oriental. Nothing like her had ever been seen in England.

She cost $70,000 and on her second voyage her freight from Hongkong amounted to $48,000. She was soon followed by a fleet. They could carry larger cargoes, make quicker passages, deliver their teas in finer condition, undersell the massive British ships, yet get twice the freight rates, some of them paying for themselves their first voyage. The tea trade almost passed out of the hands of British ship owners.

English merchants found it necessary to construct a very different type of vessel from the heavy, sluggish "kettle-bottom" creature that plowed or wallowed through the water instead of clipping lightly over the waves in an up-to-date fashion.

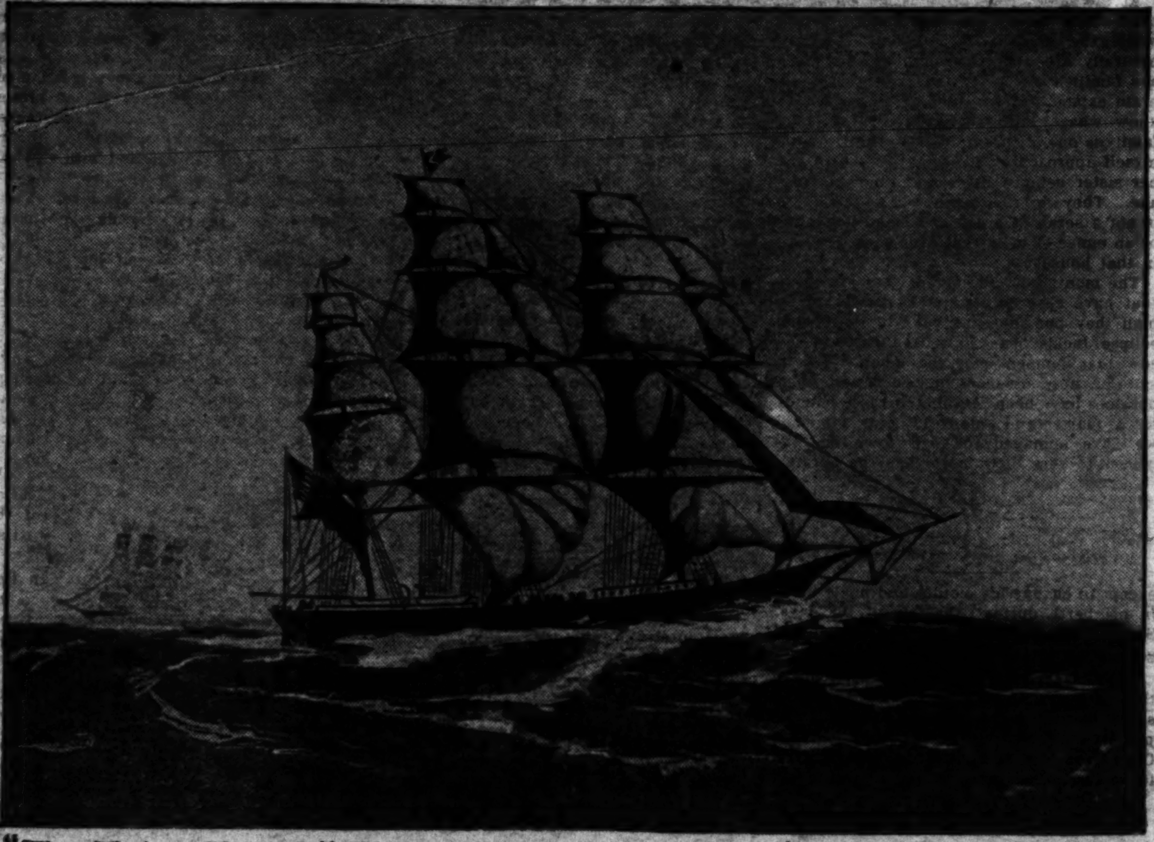
The year 1850 saw the first British clipper, 506 tons, to compete with the American tea trade. It was followed by many others. This was the beginning of a very keen rivalry in which the American ships held their own.

In the meantime the little unknown Mexican town of San Francisco had over night become one of the greatest seaports of the world. Two ships, one bark and a brig from Atlantic ports, besides calls from nine passing whale ships, was her maritime record for one year; the next, 775 vessels cleared from Atlantic ports for San Francisco. One of them was a clipper, the first in these waters, which made a record passage of 120 days.

The gold rush of '49 was on. That year alone 91,405 people from all parts of the world landed in a country that was barren and almost uninhabited, with supplies four or five months away. Getting food to these people quickly, regardless of cost, was the question which only the clipper ships could answer. Seamen were paid from $125 to $200 per month. Longshoremen and laborers, $3 to $5 an hour for short jobs, or $20 to $30 a day. Flour brought as high as $60 a barrel and other things in proportion. But what of that! In four years the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had shipped gold from San Francisco to the value of nearly $12[illegible],600,000.

Vessels received $60 a ton for freight around Cape Horn, amounting in all to more than their first cost at sea. Shipyards were taxed to their capacity, there being much other shipbuilding besides. Nearly all of the 160 ships engaged in this trade were built within four years.

The California clippers rapidly increased in size and the problem of fitting wood spars and hemp rigging that would stand the strain of the enormous amount of canvas these ships were expected to carry, gave shipbuilders something to think about. In 1852 the then largest ship was built by Donald McKay of Newburyport and Boston, the most famous clipper shipbuilder of his time. It was the sovereign of the seas, 2421 tons, and required a crew of 105 men and boys.



"The Flying Cloud," the most famous clipper ship that ever sailed the sea

The Typhoon, 1610 tons, built a year earlier, before entering on her California career was sent to Liverpool where she attracted much attention, being the first American clipper and also the largest merchant ship ever seen in that port. Half a dozen of the California clippers built in 1851 established records that were never broken.

The Flying Cloud (McKay) commanded by Capt. Creesy, made the record trip of eighty-nine days on her first voyage from New York to San Francisco—only twice equalled and never surpassed; once by the Flying Cloud herself and once by the Andrew Jackson in 1860. The achievement was celebrated in San Francisco with great rejoicing—only three months from home!—and was regarded by the eastern papers as a national triumph.

These ships were not only swift but as handsome as money and skill could make them, both in outline, and in finish and decoration. The Challenge, 2006 tons, was that year launched as the largest, finest and most costly ship then in the world. It carried 12,780 running yards of canvas, carried thirty-three sails, and had a most exciting passage. Seamen were scarce and everybody wanting to get to California. Instead of a crew he found he had a "gang of ruffians," and Capt. Waterman never undressed

GOOD SHORT STORIES FROM EVERYWHERE.

Compiled for the Illustrated Weekly.

One Way to Collect.

AN EMBALMING incident occurred in Arizona in 1892 when the Chicago exposition was in full blast. Billy McGonigle, a beloved but impecunious citizen, passed in his checks. Dr. Biford, an old army surgeon, attended him in his last illness, and afterwards embalmed the body, placed it in a metallic casket and made ready to ship it to John McGonigle, a wealthy brother of the deceased, who lived in Chicago. But the railroad company refused to receive the casket unless the freight was prepaid. The doctor telegraphed to the Chicago brother, who replied refusing to remit. Thereupon the resourceful physician had the front of the casket painted and inscribed: "In this casket reposes Billy McGonigle. His brother John, who lives at No. 3974 North Clark street, Chicago, welched on the embalming bill and cost of transportation. Whereupon this casket with its contents has been sent to the Chicago exposition to be placed on exhibition in the department of curios. In order to pay the cost of embalming and transportation this cabinet and remains will be raffled for. Five hundred tickets at 50 cents a ticket. Buy a chance. The winner can start a dime museum with Billy." Dr. Biford had a photograph taken of the casket and sent it to Brother John, and Brother John paid up and ordered his brother to be decently buried at Tucson.

Aroused His Suspicions.

A WELL-KNOWN business man who was lately married, says Billy Blair, took out some life insurance last Thursday. Coming up town Monday morning he was accosted by one of his friends with the salutation:

"What's the matter, old man? You look worried."

"Well, to be honest with you, I am. You know, I took out some life insurance last Thursday."

"Yes," replied the sympathetic friend, "but what has that to do with the woe-begone expression on your face?"

"Well, the very next day after I had it written my wife bought a new cookbook. Possibly it's all right, but it certainly looks suspicious."—[Kansas City Star.

Poor Palliatives.

WAR CORRESPONDENT FREDERICK PALMER was condemning German barbarism.

"Germany offers neutrals all sorts of palliatives," he said, "but what good are these palliatives as long as she continues her sea murders?

"Germany with her palliatives reminds me of the cheese.

"A man said to a waiter, sternly:

"'Waiter, I'm not at all satisfied with this portion of cheese here. It looks as if you'd been using it to bait a mousetrap with.'

"The waiter looked at the cheese, then flipped it over on its other side.

"'You had the cheese turned upside down, sir,' he said. 'This is the side which is intended to be uppermost. Now, you see, the cheese is all right sir.'"—[Washington Star.

Practice Makes Perfect.

THROUGHOUT the christening ceremony the baby smiled up beautifully into the clergyman's face.

"Well, madam," said he to the young wife, "I must congratulate you on your little one's behavior. I have christened more than 2000 babies, but I never before christened one that behaved so well as yours."

The young mother smiled demurely and said: "His father and I, with a pail of water, have been practicing on him for the last ten days."—[Minneapolis Tribune.

Going Some.

THE new recruits were drilling, and they were all very keen; one man especially did everything with an energy which made the N.C.O. tired. The order was given to march, and the enthusiastic one, who was in the front rank, set off with a will.

He strode out, arms swinging, head erect, and eyes strictly "front," and never noticed that he had left his comrades several paces behind.

The N.C.O. swallowed hard, and then called sweetly: "Say! You; when you get there, send us a picture postcard."—[Irish World.

Genteel Bite.

THE doctor was attending an injured woman who had come to his surgery with her arm severely bitten.

As he dressed the wound he remarked: "I cannot quite make out what sort of animal bit you. The wound is too small for a horse's bite and too big for a dog's."

Unrestrained Joy.

HE WAS Scotch and naturally he hated spending money. Therefore, when a friend in the South sent him an unstamped letter, he was much annoyed at having to pay two-pence postage.

He was still more annoyed, on opening the letter, to find nothing in it save a single sheet, saying: "I am well.—George."

In return he procured a large, flat stone, packed in a wooden box, with many wrappings, and dispatched it C.O.D.

When his friend had paid over five shillings charges he sought for an explanation, and found it in a letter at the top of the package.

"Dear George: When I heard that you were well, this great load rolled off my mind."—[New York Globe.

Esprit de Corps.

THE son of the well-to-do family had recently joined up as a private, and was spending his Christmas leave at home.

Returning from a walk, his mother espied a figure in the kitchen with the housemaid.

"Clarence," she called to her son, "Mary's got someone in the kitchen. She knows perfectly well that I don't allow followers. I wish you'd go and tell the man to leave the house at once."

Clarence duly departed to the kitchen, but returned in about half a minute.

"Sorry, mother, but I can't turn him out."

"Can't turn him out? Why on earth not?"

GOOD "EATS" FOR FIFTY CENTS A DAY.

Judicious Buying. By G. W. Burton.

FROM Dan to Beersheba, from Siskiyou to San Diego, from Atlanta to the sea, from the Clyde to John O'Groat's house, from Circle City up on the Yukon to Patagonia, from where the east becomes west and where the west becomes east, all humanity these spring days is suffering from shortage of food.

This shortage of food in some regions is so acute that there is not the traditional meal of dried apples for breakfast, to be followed by hot water for lunch, creating a swelling in the adbomen which cheats the innards into an idea that they have had their dinner.

Of course America is not in these straits. There is really very little food shortness in America. There is a great deal of cry about speculation and cornering food. No doubt some of this has been done. It has been done by householders with a fat purse who have invaded the markets and bought sugar by the bag, flour by the half-dozen barrels, eggs by the case, and so on to the end of the larder. But really in this country most of the talk about food shortage is hysteria.

At the same time there is not the great quantity of food we had a year ago, and while the demand has increased, prices naturally are high. In spite of this there are families who live well on a very moderate expenditure of coin of the realm. I know what I am talking about. My own family is one of these. We are three adults, myself approaching 80 rapidly, my wife and her sister being a little more than half my age. They do their own work, and there is not a scrap of bread of a hand's breadth or an ounce of meat that ever goes to waste in that household.

The months of the current year are those that have seen prices for foodstuffs go so high they put the cat's back in the shade, eclipse Jack's bean stalk, and emulate the cow that jumped over the moon. Yet in spite of these advances in food prices, when potatoes have been retailing at three pounds for a quarter and onions 10 cents a pound, we have managed to keep down our expenses to very little more than the normal. We have done this by careful reading of the market reports in The Times daily, and making wise substitutions, using less expensive foods for those that cost more.

We have not in one instance resorted to an inferior quality of food of any kind. What we have had has been the very best of its kind in the market. Our caterers are the best establishments in the city, and that means the best in the world. We buy the best bread made, including raisin loaves at 20 cents apiece. We will not use anything but 20-30 in prunes. Our coffee costs $1 for three pounds.

Here is our schedule of expenses for the four months of the current year, giving the totals for everything, including groceries, meats, fruits and vegetables, lights and fuel, washing and water: January, $42.71, February, $45.09; March, $38.44; April, $48.56. You see I prove what I said, that our food and its preparation, and they are all good "eats," does not cost us more than 50 cents per capita per day.

Let us take the details in the months as they run above: Groceries, $25.82, $20.18, $13.05, $14.95; meats, $4.92, $3.98, $5.10, $2.05; milk, $2.10, $1.96, $2.65, $2.17; fuel for cooking and heating, $4.01 to $1.79; wine, $2.40 to $1.80. The telephone is regular, $2.50 a month. We live in an eight-room house and use all the electricity we want, yet every month we get a bill for the minimum, 65 cents. We have quite a garden and a big lawn in front of the house, yet we have kept our water bill at the minimum every month, 50 cents. The biggest meat bill we have ever paid was last year, $7.20 for one month. Our vegetables and fruit sometimes run as high as $6.70 and as low as $3.30.

Let us go back to 1916, taking the months at random. In May our total bill came to $36.36; October, $42.83; November, $45.93; December, $49.94. You see they run about the same as the current year. We have kept them down in spite of the high prices for food, not by skimping but by substituting wisely and carefully one food for another. For example, when potatoes were very high we used rice freely. For the onion there is no substitute, but here we curtailed their use a little bit. For meats we substitute fish to a very large extent. We did not buy asparagus when it was 15 cents a pound, but waited until it was 5 cents or six pounds for a quarter. In this way we got a better vegetable for half or a third of the money. So with strawberries; we did not rush in to get the first boxes on the market, although nearly fifty years ago, when I was younger and not so wise, I many a time paid the late Andres Briswalter, who afterward died leaving a vast estate in Los Angeles, 50 cents a box for strawberries.

Let me be a little more explicit as to how we get good "eats" for 50 cents a day per capita. My own breakfast every morning consists of the dried peel of an orange which acts excellently on the internal economy of humanity, keeping the liver active and the back door open. To this is added a couple of spoonfuls of bran, ditto of Uncle Sam's health food, two big stewed prunes with plenty of prune juice poured over the bran, milk to suit, then over this is poured about two tablespoonfuls of honey, and all is accompanied by three or four dried figs. It is a mighty appetizing and perfectly satisfactory breakfast. The ladies of the family have coffee and toast. One of them eats nothing but bread made of the best white flour. Another prefers whole wheat bread, Graham or cracked wheat bread. This they butter with the best butter in the market, and with a couple of cups of black coffee they are in perfect health and good spirits. We have oranges or some other fruit every day for breakfast.

I never lunch at all myself, but the ladies have a lunch consisting of a cup of tea, some cold toast left over from the morning accompanied by a little jam.

Our dinners for the current week have consisted of a big slice of kodikook which costs about 15 cents, made into a fish chowder, with potatoes that cost about 10 cents, an onion costing about 5 cents. To this is added a bottle of claret costing 15 cents, bread and butter to suit. As for myself, my staff of life at dinner time consists of a couple of buns constructed of health bran, molasses, a little shortening and plenty of raisins. This is followed either by a dish of fruit or a pudding made of rice with plenty of raisins in it, or one of cornstarch generally mixed with chocolate.

A young lady at my elbow tells me we miss it by not using unpolished rice. But there's the rub, the unkindest cut of all. The women of my family are the most fastidious about their eating of anyone I have ever associated with. Of course it is largely prejudice, but it is only lately that one of them has taken to any bread but the whitest made in the bakeries.

Another day we had a big dish of enchiladas. This is constructed of white corn meal and a plentiful supply of a sauce made of tomatoes and chiles. This was the piece de resistance of the meal. It was preceded by a bowl of soup consisting of the liquor in which the asparagus had been cooked, with a piece of butter about the size of a walnut, very little pepper and a little salt added, then a few crackers broken up in this. The main portion of the meal was followed by a salad, always with lettuce in it, sometimes with cold asparagus, and plenty of French dressing. Then the wind-up was a dessert consisting of a couple of boxes of strawberries.

Oh, yes, we have meat, and the best in the market. Sometimes we buy a hindquarter of lamb that costs $2.75, or a big sirloin steak cut more than an inch thick, for which the butcher taxes us from $1.90 to $2, and occasionally when we have company we have a chicken or two. And we do have company, very frequently, and enjoy their presence as they enjoy our dinners.

I myself measure six feet two, and my weight is about 185 pounds. The ladies measure about five feet five and they weigh one 145, the other 155. You see on this regimen we all three weigh more than we ought to.

Our washing is included in the bills above, and costs about $1 a week.

The Clipper Ships of Yesterday.

except to change his clothes and never slept in his berth during the trip of 108 days. Several lives were lost, but he succeeded in getting his ship into port.

Often the captains were accompanied by their wives on their voyages. Capt. Patten, ship Neptune's Car (1856) was compelled to put his chief mate in irons before reaching Cape Horn, and the exposure he was obliged to endure single-handed on the cold and stormy cape brought on brain fever. The second mate was a good seaman but knew nothing of navigation. Mrs. Patton, 24 years old, had studied it carefully on a former voyage with her husband around the world and she took command of the ship, and for fifty-two days navigated the splendid clipper and brought her safe into port, in the meantime caring for her husband, who died a few months later.

Again Donald McKay built the largest ship, in 1852. The Great Republic, 4555 tons, was 335 feet long, fifty-two feet wide, and thirty-eight feet deep, with four decks and four masts—all provided with lightning rods. A fifteen-horse-power engine to hoist yards and work the pumps was a new feature. Her main mast was 120 feet (think of the work for the sailors!) her main yard 120 feet. A single set of sails required 15,653 yards of canvas. Intended to compete with the British clippers in the Australian trade, she was loaded for Liverpool and about ready to sail, when she took fire and was destroyed.

The discovery of gold in Australia in 1851 was a repetition of the California experience, including the lawlessness, dangerous crews, shanghaied seamen, etc. The misery and suffering on board the old Australian emigrant ship before the use of clippers is beyond comprehension. The filth was indescribable, and when hatchways were opened under which the people were stowed, the steam and stench were most revolting. At that time passengers were expected to do their own cooking and it is said some starved to death in rough weather from their inability to prepare food. Competition of the different lines worked great benefit to passengers, as their comfort was carefully studied.

The British had been sailing by way of the Cape of Good Hope for many years; but Lieut. Maury discovered that the west winds were more favorable so they continued around Cape Horn on the return from Australia, thus circling the globe. With the increased speed of the clipper, this reduced the time about one half.

A new British clipper sailed around the world twice in her first year. An American clipper went once around in five months and four days, and the James Baines, built by Donald McKay, made it in 132 days. The Lightning, built by McKay in 1854 for the Australian trade, on her run from Boston to Liverpool made 436 miles in twenty-four hours, an average of eighteen knots an hour, which gave her the proud distinction of being the swiftest ship that ever sailed the sea. No ocean steamship of her day approached her by less than a hundred miles; and it was twenty-five years before the Atlantic greyhound Arizona made eighteen knots for a single hour. And on a subsequent voyage around the globe, the Lightning made twenty-one knots an hour, the highest reliably recorded rate of speed ever made by a sailing vessel.

That there were many wonderful and exciting races over these various courses, often for large sums of money, may be readily believed; and none were more interesting than among the large California fleet of equally matched vessels over their 15,000 mile race course around the Horn.

The United States was in the zenith of her power in 1851. The tea trade in China, the gold discoveries in California and Australia, with the San Francisco trade all to themselves; in the North Atlantic the American Collins Line steamships competing successfully with the Cunarders, the Baltic (American,) holding the record for speed; the packet ships still holding their own; ships from home ports profitably engaged in Indian, African and South American trades; New Bedford and Nantucket whaling ships in every sea; our river steamboats the most perfect type of the period—all this, not to mention our fishing schooners, sloops, yachts, pilot boats, etc., placed the United States at this time far in advance of the merchant shipping of the whole British fleet.

For five years she was at the high tide of her prosperity. But now the rush to the mines was past. Freight rates had dropped, and economy, rather than speed, was necessary. After '55 the extreme clippers in the United States were succeeded by medium clippers which could carry larger cargoes with fewer men.

It had been easy for the packet clippers when they had only the clumsy sidewheelers to compete with, but with the Inman (British) line between Liverpool and Philadelphia, they soon began to lose in the race, which ended when the Inman started her steamers to New York in 1857. Also there came the financial depression of '57, and that year the last American clipper was built.

In the meantime Great Britain, which had been gradually substituting iron for wood even to steel masts, spars and rigging, had a new type of tea clippers, wooden ships with iron frames, and bottoms sheathed with copper which considerably lessened resistance; so that after the financial depression she no longer had need of American-built ships. Iron had superseded wood in the construction of large vessels. Following the repeal of her naval laws, Great Britain, with iron and steam, regained her empire of the seas.

It here may be noted that the competition between wood and iron, between sail and steam, began in the early days of shipbuilding. The first iron sailing vessel was built in 1818, the first paddle steamer in 1821. At last the Suez Canal (1869) and steam were too much for the British sails and there were no more British clippers after that date.

Although after the Civil War American shipbuilding for the overseas trade steadily declined, and these later ships were not clippers, it was not till 1893 that the last American wooden sailing ship, the Aryan, was launched.

Why did not America also grow into the iron and steam era? There are those who say the American flag was driven from the ocean by outgrown and unjust laws; that had these men repealed as Great Britain's were, the United States would still have her place upon the seas.

Though good for fifty years or more of service, the career of many of the clipper ships was cut short by fire and shipwreck, some on their first voyage. Fire claimed the James Baines at Liverpool in '58, and the Flying Cloud at St. John, N. B., in 1874. Four clipper ships were destroyed in the Civil War. Some were never heard from. The Lightning disappeared from the shipping list in 1866. The British vessels fared about the same.

The old-fashioned wooden sloop-of-war, Adams, built by McKay for our civil conflict, attracted much interest when, a dozen or so years ago, still in use as a training ship, she was in the Santa Barbara channel with some of our new war vessels—but she was not a clipper.

In 1910 the Titanic, one of the last of the new type iron-and-wood British clippers, built in 1866, was the only clipper that could be traced as in active service. She was sailing under the flag of Italy between European and South American ports.

Getting Married is Easy.

[Cedar Rapids Gazette:] Miss Emma J. Fordyce, chemistry teacher, speaking on "How to Choose a Husband," told Coe College co-eds, "A husband is first a vocation, then an avocation, an aspiration and finally an inspiration."

"A husband," she said, "is not a meal ticket, nor a purse, nor a bank, nor a motor car. A husband is one chosen out of the world to love until that love makes him the best one in the world."

Miss Fordyce said that she never knew any old maid who had to be an old maid. "Any man or woman who wanted to be married, could be married. That is easy. The point was for the woman to marry the man of her choosing."

A woman, she said, could always choose a husband, but she did not always get him, and that was a tragedy.

DRAMAS OF A DAY IN A PAWNSHOP.

Heartache. By F. A. Scott.

"THE only difference between my business and that of a well-regulated bank is on the customers' side of the counter," said my friend, the pawnbroker, as he twirled the combination to one of the four huge safes in the rear of his place of business.

"The methods of a great bank and that of a modern pawnshop come to a parity in every department. We have as an elaborate system of accounts, exercise the same care in making an investment and treat our customers with the same courtesy as the larger banks. We are bankers—the poor man's banker—in fact the business was conceived for this purpose—that of making short time loans to the needy. Our customers are men and women who, because of lack of collateral, could not get a loan in a bank.

"Come in and spend the day and see how we conduct business. The pawnshop, while one of the commonest sights in an American city, is perhaps one of the least understood. The business, for generations discredited in the eyes of the police and a majority of citizens, is nevertheless one that is more open to inspection than any other. It has been more legislated against, more embarrassed and closer watched than any other and unless it had merit could never have survived."

Thus I came to occupy a position behind the little screened booths on a recent day and watched the operation of the lending of money and listened to the philosophy of the veteran merchant. The acumen displayed by the owner of the place and by his employees, their detached, dispassionate scrutiny of everyone that came within their doors, their cryptic utterances that conveyed a meaning among themselves and left the customers in doubt, their knowledge of the laws of psychology, all tended to open up a new vista of the business, never suspected from the outside of the counter.

As we opened up for the day's business the proprietor let loose a torrent of explanations. "This business easily falls into three divisions; first there is the business of lending money on pledges. As most of the pledges consist of worn jewelry, watches and precious stones, it becomes necessary tc employ a watch and clock maker to put the stuff in repair. That naturally brings the second line of business which is the repairing of watches, clocks and jewelry for the public. Handling pledges entails the selling of the unredeemed goods and in order to meet all demands we get in the habit of filling up the unredeemed pledge stock with new merchandise and this gives us a regular trade in new and second-hand jewelry and the side lines, guns, photographic material and musical instruments. Without this extension of business few pawnbrokers could earn a living notwithstanding popular conception of the enormous profits we make."

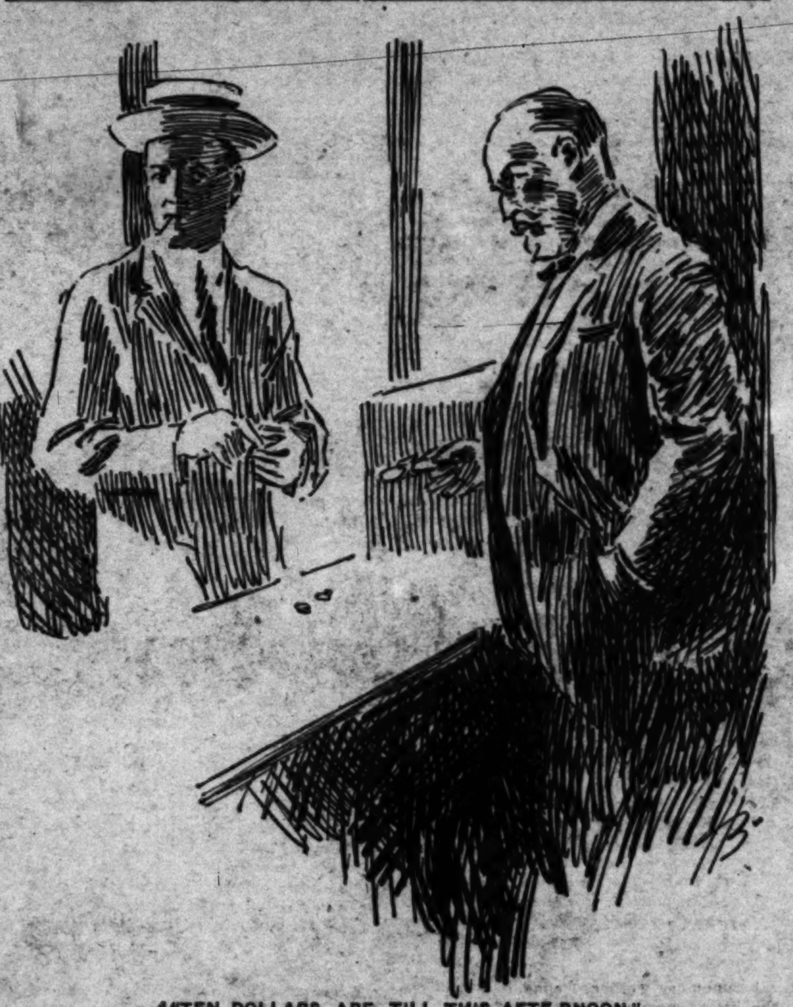
As he spoke, the first customer of the day entered, a youth scarcely past his majority, pasty-faced—the skin ashen and dead looking. It was plain that he had just finished a Neronic night. The puffed eyes, the inevitable cigarette, hanging pendulous from his flaccid lips, a true inhabitant of the world of gray shadows. With nervous haste he stepped into one of the booths, stripping a ring from his finger and a pin from his tie.

"Ten dollars, Abe, till this afternoon," the boy murmured with weary movements of hands and head. Then he lapsed into silence while the pen of the pawnbroker scratched over the "sheet." Not a question or any other familiarity. The ordeal over, the youth departed and silence again reigning, the pawnbroker, with a twisted smile, looked at the articles in his hand. "I have had those two articles in here fifty times in the last three years," he declared. "That boy is a reformed 'hophead.' That is, he thinks he is reformed. He spent six months in prison and now he no longer uses morphine, but he might as well; he drinks more than any two men I know. He will be back this afternoon with the money to redeem this junk—where he gets it only the police and men of his stamp know. More than likely some poor drab of the underworld could give us information along that line."

But the second customer is at hand. A great hulk of a man, his face rosy with good living, his clothing of excellent texture and design, and in general appearance a man who is prosperous. His occupation would be hard to determine. As I looked him over I could not reconcile him in any position. He was neither a rancher, business man or professional. His hands were plump and while not particularly well groomed, did not show signs of manual labor. But the pawnbroker was not in doubt. With a pleasant nod my friend invited the stranger into a booth and inquired of him his pleasure.

"I got trimmed in a little game last night," the man shamefacedly laughed. "Fours got tangled up with a straight spade flush—bet my head off—you know how it goes. Can I get twenty on this watch until tomorrow—have to get a draft cashed." Yes he could get twenty or as much more as he needed. The watch was worth $400.

I turned to the clerk next to me and asked him what he thought of the stranger. "Oh, I pegged him the minute he stuck his head in the door," declared the clerk. "Cattle buyer or land speculator from out in Arizona. Big man in his own town. Solid as a rock and worth half a million. He has traveled some and learned. A few years ago he probably wore more jewelry than a diva—get hep to the watch. Note the clothing and the contrast between his clothing and his hat. He probably has only one vice—poker. Last night he got into a game with strangers—sheer loneliness—and got trimmed for his roll."



"TEN DOLLARS, ABE, TILL THIS AFTERNOON."

Desiring to test the clerk's accurateness I leaned over the counter and asked the affable stranger what he thought of the market on the previous day, suggesting that the action of the Chicago Board of Trade in stopping speculating in certain grains would have a stimulating effect on the meat industry. Did the clerk hit the mark? Well, he did. That man was part cow. He talked circles around the cattle industry and his home town was Mesa, Ariz. Later I spoke to my friend, the pawnbroker, complimenting the clerk on his insight and discernment and received the following bit of trenchant information:

"Every pawnbroker is a true psychologist or he is a failure. The psychology is native in a majority of the cases and the possessor could not give you any explanation of his ability, his keenness of vision. It is doubtful if he is aware that he sees rightly because of psychology. He has no knowledge of the laws that cover events and perhaps never heard of Gross, Lombroso, Garofalo, Haffbauer or any of the score of other psychologists who have labored successfully in this field. The average pawnbroker of Semetic origin gets his psychology from his first employer. In fact a broker is more careful to test this power in a new clerk than he is to establish the man's ability to successfully appraise an article of merchandise.

"You can get an accurate idea of our ability to judge a man's honesty of purpose by this psychological instinct when I tell you that in eleven years' business, in which more than a million and a quarter dollars in business was transacted in loans, the loss by having to return stolen goods to the rightful owners was less than $600. During this time we refused several hundred loans and in many of the cases we were enabled to assist the police. Not once was our judgment in error."

This homily was not given in a bragging manner but was a mere statement of fact that was later ascertained to be true. But we are interrupted by a third customer. An artisan, offering his kit of tools in pawn. Here is something I am familiar with. I make a mental appraisement of the contents of the box. Those tools are easily worth $300 to replace. They are not only in good condition—they are better than new articles. Polished and oiled, the owner has selected them during a term of years and is keeping them in the best of shape. I look at the lines in the man's face and try to imagine what has brought him to the doors of the pawnbroker to cash in on what must be his only means of a livelihood. His manner, his careworn face and his threadbare clothing interest me. Surely only the sickness of a wife or children could bring this man to part with that box. He wants $15 and the clerk is offering him but ten. There is a finality in the clerk's shrug and the upturned palms. I hasten to make inquiries.

"Oh, he is a regular. Too much whisky. He simply cannot resist the gnawing appetite. We could lend him $50 on his outfit and be sure of getting back the money and the interest. He is a good moral risk if there is such a thing. But we know he has a family and that if we give him any sum over $10 he will make the family suffer. He will take the $10, drink for two or three days and then come back here and beg a couple of dollars more. I will give him one dollar. The next morning he will come here with a contractor who will redeem the tools and put the man to work. In three or four weeks he will be back again. He comes here because down deep in his heart he is glad we won't give him what he asks. He will curse me for a shark, but he knows that I am the one man who will protect him from his appetite."

Now comes a rush of business. It is after 10 o'clock and all of the clerks in the store are employed. Men and women enter and depart. Was there ever such a polygot assortment of tongues! It is a clearinghouse of the underworld and the down and out. A woman with deep-set eyes and painted lips slips into a booth. She nervously extracts a number of rings from her purse and asks for a sum of money. The clerk with methodical care looks over the assortment, pushes back a plain gold band ring and offers her less than she asked for. With meticulous care she explains her necessity. But the clerk is obdurate and suggests that she try some other place. Eventually she accepts the money offered, folds the ticket and departs. I hasten to question the clerk.

"Morphine eater and a dangerous risk," he answers. "She has been in trouble time and again and we have lost several loans made to her. I would have refused her anything only I happened to know she owns this jewelry—it has been in here before. But mostly we lay off of her. Sometimes the boss will advance her $5 on her promise to pay as that is a better risk than taking her kinky (doubtful) slum."

But I see another woman at the counter. Surely she has no connection with the night life of a big city. Plainly dressed, her hair smooth and confined in a tiny knot under a worn bonnet. I edge along where I can hear her speak. She unties a number of coins from the corner of a handkerchief and timidly pushes over a pawn ticket. I question the clerk with a glance and he volubly explains that she is one of the unfortunates of the city. A widow with a half-witted son and a tubercular daughter. She ekes out a living by scrubbing floors in an office building and regularly patronizes the pawnshops. She cannot make ends meet and monthly pledges her few small articles of jewelry, always returning to rescue them at the end of thirty days. Most of the clerks in the shop seek to aid her and keep her informed of odd jobs of housework and cleaning.

Here comes a man and his wife. The man carries a huge bundle and the wife partially conceals her face. She moves into a position where she will not be observed. The man does not enter one of the booths but boldy throws the bundle on the counter. He is opening it. A dress suit appears and then articles of women's apparel. A clerk steps up briskly and informs the man that clothing is not accepted as collateral. The man's face is a study of consternation. He looks helplessly at his wife who moves to his side. All thoughts of concealment are forgotten. "But we must have money," she moans. "See, we are back in our rent and this morning the landlady locked the door behind us. We must have money."

The clerk takes a card from a pile in the cash register and scribbles a message on it. "Take this down to that address on Los Angeles street and you will be accommodated. Then go to the municipal employment bureau and you will easily find a position. Men and their wives are in demand on the ranches and you can get good wages. Yes, I know you have never been forced to work at manual labor before"—the clerk interrupts a half-formed protest from the woman—"but things are different now. On a ranch you can save 95 per cent. of your salary and get a new start. Hard work for a few months won't hurt you."

I follow the man and woman and they hold an earnest conversation on the street. The man has the light of hope in his eyes—the wife is anxious. It is plain that she dislikes the idea of hard work and is arguing against it. But the husband prevails and they walk away to enter a new life.

And so the day continues. The ceaseless march of the unfortunate and temporarily embarrassed, the sick and the vicious, the Brothers, who had become noteworthy competitors, to join his allied forces, and, meeting with refusal, he tried to compel compliance by resorting to his destructive "freeze-out" tactics. The hustling brothers grew rich in spite of his opposition and later they did become a link in the merger chain. They possessed a show but slightly inferior to the Barnum & Bailey affair.

After Bailey's demise, they purchased his interests from the heirs; and, today, they dominate this gigantic monopoly. The founders of the Ringling enterprises embarked in the show business a quarter of a century ago with but a few hundred dollars capital. That the brothers have displayed splendid commercial perspicacity, their present pre-eminence amply attests, yet they, seemingly, lack Bailey's originality, and obviously adopt many of his ideas even in the matter of billing on any small independent organizations that has the temerity to visit a city.

The circus of today is an overwhelmingly more respectable institution than it was thirty years ago. Then almost every show carried a gang of thieving "grafters," whose illegitimate earnings were divided with the management. A sham detective condoled with the victims who complained; accompanied them about the grounds in a futile search for the thief, who, forewarned, was either in secure hiding or effectually disguised.

Fought for Their Lives.

Gangs of unattached crooks followed the show and burglarized residences while the occupants attended the circus. All shows were held in more or less disrepute and in some rural districts the prejudice against them was intense. This was illustrated by the case at Jacksonville, Tex., when old John Robinson exhibited in 1872. At the afternoon performance, just before the show began, several toughs tried to instigate a general fight by sitting in the ring bank, with their feet inside, and, flourishing knives, threatened to cut off the horses' feet if they trod on their toes. Bill Devere, a big pugnacious concert comedian, courageously carried the ring leader forcibly to his seat, and only the interference of the local sheriff quelled an embryo riot. Realizing that hostilities would be resumed later, the management decided to leave without giving a night performance. While at work loading the train, a gang of desperadoes stabbed an attache in the back. The attacked canvasman lustily yelled "Hey Rube" (the showman's appeal to his coworkers for assistance,) and a pitched battle immediately ensued, which resulted in the death of thirteen of the toughs and the wounding of several of the show crew. The showman had selected positions of vantage in anticipation of an attack and from their concealed stations they poured a deadly fire into the ranks of their assailants. Some dastards cut the beams of a bridge a short distance from town, expecting to completely wreck the circus train, but it passed over in safety, and a passenger train which followed plunged through the bridge.

This miscarriage of the plan antagonized the railroad people, who supported the circus contingent and aided them to leave the town without further molestation.

The show went to Galveston, but the mayor, who was a friend of Robinson, notified him that the authorities of Jacksonville had issued murder warrants for every showman, and advised him to decamp without showing. It was near the close of the season, and the show made a long jump to its Cincinnati winter quarters. The warrants were never served.

In all probability, "grafting" was primarily responsible for this melee. It bred the antipathy that was at its foundation These crafty, short change manipulators are still adjuncts of most small circuses; but the large concerns will not now countenance them; and each carries a skilled bona fide detective who prevents crooks from operating on the grounds or following in the wake of the show.

Beating the Big Drum.

The potency of judicious advertising is well exemplified in the circus world. Any competent manager will tell you that good liberal publicity is of prime importance. Repeated experiments have demonstrated that a mere, quiet announcement will not attract the throngs. As young bees ignore all gentle persuasion to enter a hive, while the rattling of tin pans will bring them swarming into a hollow log, so the public will ignore the quiet announcement, but come swarming to a good circus that vigorously beats the publicity tin pan.

By skillful advertising the public can be made to take a lively interest in attractions that otherwise would go practically unnoticed. For example; a circus manager advertised that he would pay $10,000 for a six months' appearance, in his spectacular street pageant, to the woman that an impartial committee voted the most beautiful. All were eligible and no prior experience was necessary. Selection would be made by photograph, which all applicants were requested to furnish.

In reality no "committee" existed, and before the scheme was launched Louise Montague had been engaged at a stipulated salary. She had for several years previously toured the country as a musical comedy artist, without her beauty having excited any marked degree of comment. Shortly after her supposedly successful candidacy she became the most discussed woman in America. Her engagement lasted but one season, and the withdrawal of the publicity spot-light relegated her to comparative obscurity.

Adam Forepaugh had, for many years, carried, as a part of his menagerie, two dwarf zebus. In looking about for a suitable attraction to boom that season he acted upon the suggestion of his press agent and featured this pair of diminutive Asiatic cows. The same people who had heretofore viewed them with almost indifference now regarded them with keen interest. A few years since, the Ringlings featured as a rare curiosity, a giraffe. These animals had frequently, in the past, accompanied circuses without eliciting especial attention, yet this widely heralded specimen became the cynosure of all eyes. Barnum & Bailey later exhibited a group of giraffes in whose behalf no special press work had been done, and they attracted but little attention.

Barnum Bought Jumbo.

Barnum & Bailey purchased for a nominal sum from the London Zoological Gardens, the huge elephant "Jumbo." He was then but little known to fame and was not considered a great curiosity. Adept publicity methods made him world-renowned and a phenomenal drawing card.

Thirty-five years ago Barnum and Forepaugh were the recognized sovereigns of circusdom, and were inveterate enemies. The former was scholarly and refined, while the latter was illiterate and coarse. Barnum originated, while Forepaugh imitated. When Barnum procured an unusually strong attraction Forepaugh instantly proceeded to obtain a superior duplicate. When they encountered in the same territory their commercial combats invariably assumed a very acrimonious personal aspect. Each spent a small fortune in printer's ink in an attempt to do the largest business. Both turned people away at every performance; but, owing to lavish expenditures, both lost considerable money. In 1880 they clashed at Buffalo, Barnum showing one day in advance of his hated antagonist. The usual skirmish occurred and thousands were unable to gain admittance; but, because of the unusual expense, each sustained a pecuniary loss.

The writer was with Forepaugh that season and heard him urgently request his performers to exert their best endeavors to surpass the accomplishments of the Barnum troupe. During the progress of the performance, our ringmaster pointed out to the audience the many ways in which we excelled the other organization. Both parties were featuring the "Human Cannon Ball" act. A human being was projected from a massive cannon. Barnum had imported an English woman to perform this startling exploit, and, as soon as Forepaugh heard of this engagement, he arranged to give a somewhat similar and improved performance. The Barnum woman alighted in a huge net, while the Forepaugh woman was caught in the hands of her husband suspended from a distant trapeze bar—a more difficult feat.

ALBERT GEYER
CHAMPION TUMBLER of the WORLD

The Thrill That Failed.

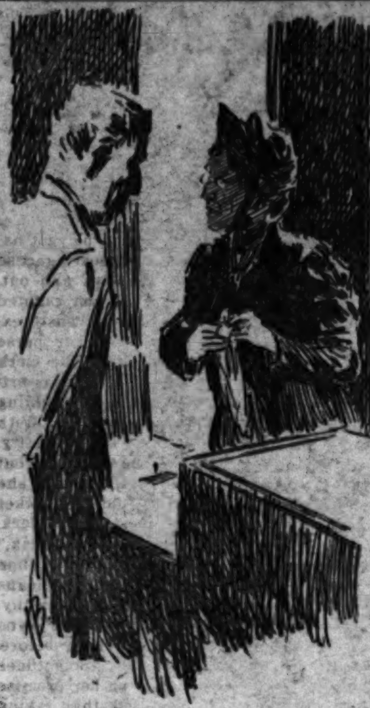
We had the better company, and Forepaugh was highly elated with the applause and comments of our audience and stood radiantly beaming near the ring in plain view of the spectators. All progressed serenely until the cannon act was reached. The ringmaster explained in detail the superiority of our method of performing the trick. The husband hung from the trapeze bar while his wife took her position inside the cannon. The band stopped playing and the multitude sat in silent expectancy, gazing eagerly and intently at every movement. "Get ready" called the husband. "I am ready" came the answer. He impressively counts, "one, two, three, go." Rubber fastenings and springs are plainly heard releasing their tension, but alas! there is no report. She is hurled through space, is caught by her husband and, about ten seconds too late, the cannon "booms" vociferously. The spectators were temporarily dumbfounded; but, observing the crestfallen appearance of the circus people, they realized the absurdity of the thing, and almost simultaneously burst into unrestrained laughter. Forepaugh, thoroughly humiliated, made a hasty exit. It was the first and only time that season that the cannon failed to operate properly; and we always suspected that a Barnum emissary brought about the fiasco on this occasion.

The side show where curiosities are shown, formerly was prolific with fakes, "Chemah," the once famous Chinese pigmy, was a diminutive Jew. The white haired, pink eyed Madagascar natives, were American albinos; an unaccountable freak of nature which medical science asserts is liable to occur in any Caucasian or negro family. "Zip," the "What is it?" fantastically garbed and with head grotesquely shaven, was a mystery closely guarded by the owner, but in the opinion of nearly all showmen was a half-witted negro. The Circassian lady with her wonderful bushy hair is an American girl selected for her exuberant head of hair, which she cuts to the required length, places in "tins" for a fortnight, and when released, washes it in stale beer, when it becomes fluffy and stands erect.

The "Wild Maori Giant" who attracted widespread attention with Forepaugh, was a good natured, inoffensive, elongated negro, procured in New York. With hideously painted face, attired in animal skins and elaborately decorated with human bones, he assuredly presented a savage spectacle and, when he tugged at his chains, glared angrily and foamed at the mouth, the beholder almost invariably backed out of reach. The foam effect was produced by chewing soap.

hopeless invalids and the gamblers with fate. Now and then a plainclothes detective stops in and chats with the head of the firm, requesting information or sounding a warning about the more recent thefts. The officer has little hope of learning anything of value. He knows that a good thief—a professional, shuns the pawnshop as a pestilence. Stolen goods seldom find their way into the pawnshop excepting through a third person, the thief patronizing a "fence" or receiver of stolen goods.

The day is nearly finished and still an occasional customer enters. But the real rush comes after the evening meal—when the minor articles of value are offered for inspection. The night customers are mostly men of the working class, homeless and out of work, seeking relief from the inhospitality of the streets. They are given what they ask and then sent hither and yon—your good pawnbroker is a veritable mine of information about labor needs. He will tell you that his business is all routine and there is no sentiment in it. He professes to see neither humor nor pathos in his customers—but watch him and you will see that he takes a close personal interest in everyone that is deserving.



"A WIDOW WITH A HALF-WITTED SON AND A TUBERCULAR DAUGHTER."

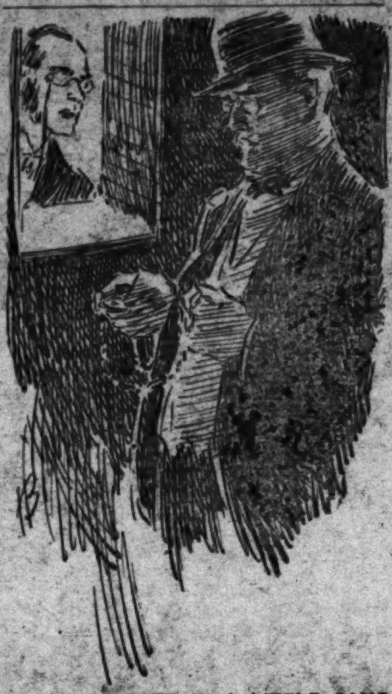
At last the last straggler is gone and the clerks are putting away the valuables, checking up and filling in blanks. The broker lights a cigar and talks shop. He starts at the beginning, tells you of the loan business and its control under the old Mosaic law and down through the centuries to the inception of the latter-day pawnshop. Here is his story as viewed by himself:

The idea that gave birth to the pawnshop was conceived by the paternal head of the House of Lombardy during the fourteenth century, in Florence, Italy. The members of this family were famous as bankers and well known as philanthropists. Their coat of arms was the Three Golden Pills so often seen suspended before the entrance of the later day pawnshop. This family of bankers conceived the idea of lending money to the poor and indigent at low rates of interest on any personal property. These were short time loans, the intention being to relieve the borrower of a temporary embarrassment and to establish in his mind that it was not only the rich that could obtain money relief from the banker. The underlying purpose that actuated the Lombardy family was the laudable one of pure charity. However, this pawnshop, if it may be so called, became so successful that the Lombardy family established branch institutions of similar character in nearly all parts of Europe and the Three Golden Pills grew in size as they were copied by others envious of the success made by the Lombardies in this charitable venture, until the coat of arms became the symbol of the later-day pawnshop and the name and object of Lombardy was lost sight of and forgotten.

As in every walk of life and in every effort of human endeavor there is a survival of the fittest, this may be said to be true also of the pawnshop. The pawnbroker who would succeed must keep himself advised of the prices, conditions of the wares and merchandise he handles, for in his knowledge hereof lies his success or failure. An article of jewelry may be of a certain value today and because of change of style or design decreed by the fickle Dame Fashion may depreciate as rapidly as the value of a castoff garment.

The patron entering a pawnshop for the purpose of making a loan is usually in urgent need of the money he desires to secure. The appraiser must calculate rapidly the value of the security offered. There is no time to inquire whether the patron is the rightful owner—the appraiser must depend entirely upon his judgment of human nature in this respect. The appraisal having been made the patron is advised as to the amount the pawnbroker is willing to loan, the amount varying in percentage of value from 60 to 90 per cent. of the real value of the merchandise offered at the time the loan is made (this security is then held seven months before the same is forfeited or offered for sale.) It can readily be seen that the appraiser must anticipate his market at least seven months.

The appraisal having been made and accepted by the patron, a contract is drawn setting forth the terms and conditions upon which the loan is made and giving a full and accurate description of the security left. A copy of this contract is then made and handed to the borrower (this copy is commonly known as the pawn ticket,) the security left for the loan is then taken by the clerk, packed in a container marked with the number of the loan, the name of the person making the loan, the amount and the date of expiration. The security is then filed away in numerical order, in the vaults of the institution. The clerk delivers the money to the borrower and immediately fills out a report for police inspection containing the following items: Time of day when loan was made; pawn ticket number; amount loaned; article upon which the loan was made; the description of the kind of the article, the color of same, size or length and the design; kind of sets or stones and the numbers and size of each; the maker's name, the number, monogram, inscription or other marks of identification; the name of the borrower, his address (street and number;) his sex; apparent age; height; build; complexion; style and color of beard; color and style of dress.



"I GOT TRIMMED IN A LITTLE GAME LAST NIGHT."

This work completed the book-keepers take up their portion. There is a card ledger entry made of the account; there is a follow-up entry made for the purpose of keeping the customer advised as to the condition of his loan and for the purpose of notifying him should he become delinquent in the payment of his interest. These notices are mailed every three months to those who have become delinquent.

This completes the clerical work of receiving a loan; when a loan is redeemed the same work is done again with the difference that the entries are made crediting the loan. In case of forfeiture notices are mailed prior to the sale or foreclosure to the respective borrower. A complete entry of all such foreclosures is made giving the complete and original data as compiled above and the same is advertised for five days omitting the name and address of the borrower in a newspaper published in the city. The security is then sold at auction to the highest bidder.

Covering a period of eleven years and six months 72,000 loans were made by Los Angeles pawnbrokers, the amount of cash involved being $1,025,000. The average for cash loan was $14.25. The actual number of days consumed in transacting the above business was found to be 3518. The average amount of cash loaned per day was $299.25. At the rate of 2 per cent. per month, this volume of business would afford an average income of $6 per day. The number of loans per day averaged approximately twenty-one.

At no time during the entire period did the total amount of cash outstanding exceed an average of $33,685.50. The average income on the gross amount per month at 2 per cent. was found to be $673.71. The gross income for one year was $8084.52.

The expense necessary to transact the business averaged as follows: Per year, rent, $4200; license, $200; pawn tickets, $37.50; clerk hire, $25 per week, $1300; city and county taxes, $295; stationery, $15; advertising, $1200. Gross income, $8084.52.

WAS CUSTER LED TO DEATH BY TREACHERY?

BY W. W. CARLAND.

I have just read Minnie Prevost's explanation of the death of Gen. Custer at the battle of the Little Big Horn, and it especially interests me because I accompanied the so-called "Custer Expedition" of 1876, and fortunately for me, was about seventeen miles from the actual battle on June 25th of that year, and where Fort Custer now stands, near the mouth of the Little Big Horn River.

As far as I know there never has been any mystery about how Gen. Custer met his death. Officers of the Seventh Cavalry under Reno, and officers of the Seventh Infantry who were with Gen. Terry, as well as individual Sioux Indians who participated in the massacre, know that Gen. Custer, his two brothers, Tom (a captain in the Seventh Cavalry,) Boston Custer, a civilian, Calhoun, a lieutenant, and Antie Reed (the latter, the general's young nephew,) were found together on a little rise where they made their last stand.

It is true that Gen. Custer's body was not mutilated, probably because of the Agnus Dei, worn by him, and many, if not all of the Sioux knew its import from the teachings of Father de Amet, who always traveled among them without weapons of any kind, and was very much respected by them. It is possible, but not probable, that Minnie's people were with the Sioux. The Standing Rock Indian agency furnished the Sioux warriors. Sioux Indians, claiming to have been participants in the massacre, have told me, through an interpreter, that Rain-in-the-face, a Sioux Indian, who was once arrested and thrown into the guard house of Fort Rice by order of Gen. Custer, killed the general, and there is no reason to doubt their statement, as Rain-in-the-face was present at the battle, and was of revengeful disposition. The general was shot, and not killed by a war club.

There is no mystery about the massacre, but there is some unwritten history connected with it. Custer was betrayed, either by stupidity or treachery. It has been said he acted rashly. This is not borne out by the facts. I have a copy of the last order Gen. Terry gave him, and in substance it is as follows: "I have too much confidence in your ability to hamper you by precise instructions." The letter then tells him to proceed up the Rosebud to where "Mich" Bourier, the French half-breed, had seen the Sioux, while Terry was to cross the Seventh Infantry, under Gen. Gibbons, over to that side of the Yellowstone, and connect with Custer later.

I remember well the "council of war" on the little steamer Far West, at the mouth of the Rosebud, in the Yellowstone, on the evening of June 22.

It had been a hot day, succeeded by cool evening breezes that sounded mournfully in the scattered cotton trees along the stream. The old "cottonwoods" seemed like giant sentinels standing out there in the dark, sighing and "grieving, if aught inanimate e'er grieved over the unreturning brave."

Gen. Terry had come up there on the boat from Powder River—our supply depot—while Custer and his regiment had come by land. A scouting party, under Reno, had located the Indians a few miles up the Rosebud, and Terry had assembled the officers to discuss plans for action. It was at this meeting that "Mich" Bourier, the half-breed scout, told of the several thousand ponies he had seen, therefore Custer was well aware of the force his little command was being sent against.

He was ordered to proceed up the Rosebud, and he obeyed. He knew when he found the Sioux he could not go into camp and wait for anyone. Indians do not extend such courtesies.

About 11 o'clock on the morning of the 25th he found the camp, scattered for a mile along the banks of the Little Big Horn. As in all his previous successful campaigns, he separated his command, giving to Maj. Reno one half, he taking the other, excepting that Benteen with an escort for the pack train, as I remember, accompanied Reno.

Reno was ordered to attack the village at one point while Custer was attacking at another.

The facts are that Reno went into the woods, and then when firing commenced ordered a retreat which was no more than a disorderly scramble for the hill on which Terry found him a day later. It was in this retreat that Reno lost most of the men and officers that were killed and wounded in his command.

Custer meantime was fighting for his life and one officer at least, of Reno's command, heard the firing and begged Reno to go to his assistance. At this time the main body of the Indians were fighting Custer. By 2 o'clock he had been wiped out, and the Indians then concentrated on Reno's position. He held out until Terry came up with the infantry. The rest is known. I have no personal end to gain by praising Custer or in reflecting upon Reno. I was a mere boy, and my statements are made from personal recollections and from what I overheard officers say.

It is a fact that Reno and Custer only spoke to each other officially. Reno hated Custer. And Benteen was not Custer's friend.

Reno may have acted honorably. If he did, the charge of stupidity must stand, for he did not go to Custer's assistance when nearly all of the male Sioux were attacking Custer, as Indians present have since declared.

It has been forgotten, perhaps, that in Reno's command was a full-blooded Sioux Indian officer, a first lieutenant, in the Seventh Cavalry. He was killed in the mad scramble up the hill.

It may be of interest to state another fact. I believe I was the first white person to see "Curly" the Crow scout, after the battle. He came riding down the Little Big Horn Valley to us, waving his calico shirt from the end of his gun, as a flag of truce.

There was none in our party who could speak the Crow tongue but from the "sign language" it was understood that Custer had surrounded the Indians and captured the whole outfit. There was great rejoicing in our little party of about forty persons. Later, "Muggins" Taylor, a white scout from Terry's command, came to us with the true report. He was on his way to Fort Ellis, or Shaw, as I recollect, with dispatches to Washington.

The statement by Minnie that some of the men with Custer died of fright is improbable. They were old campaigners, and the regiment as a whole could not be surpassed in any country.

I have seen the flower of French cavalry sweep over the sward at Longchamps; have witnessed the Uhlans, the Cossacks, and the crack English regiments at work, but I never have seen a finer body of officers, men and horses than the gallant Seventh swinging into line at sunrise in those far off days.

Some time later, two years or more, as I recollect, Gen. Miles corralled the Cheyennes, and as late as the early 80's they were around Fort Keogh, Montana, where Miles was then stationed. I never heard of their participation in the Custer massacre.

Pigs that Climb Trees.

Is there anything stranger than the undisputed fact that in Morocco pigs climb trees in search of nuts? Not only pigs but goats. The puzzle is not in the pigs and the goats, however, for they are of the common variety that we see here. It is the tree that is strange. It is called the argan nut tree and it grows near Agadir. Usually it shoots out from a steep hillside. The trunk is broad and flat and almost horizontal, and so are the main branches, forming ample and solid foothold for any animal that may be tempted by the olive-shaped nuts growing within easy reach of the main branches.

BEHIND THE SCENES AT THE CIRCUS.

The Old Performer Talks.. By Albert Geyer.

[Note—The writer of this article was at one time the most famous circus acrobat in the world and is still well known wherever the "Big Tops" are raised. For some years he has been living in Los Angeles enjoying a well earned leisure. Sometimes he puts on his old circus tights and goes up to the Athletic Club Gymnasium and makes the eyes of the Amateur Acrobats pop out.—Ed.]

INASMUCH as there exists no written history of the circus, we must perforce accept tradition in lieu thereof. According to tradition, the colossal amusement institution known as the circus had its inception 200 years ago in a one-wagon show owned by an itinerant showman. This showman, his wife and children—all acrobats, jugglers and contortionists—traveled and slept in the same wagon. They carried trumpets and drums, and, upon arriving at a village, they attracted a crowd by their noise. In the center of a ring of people, they performed their feats, took up a collection and drove on. Subsequently hundreds of these primitive strolling wagon shows toured Europe, and the stupendous aggregations of this day are the lineal descendants of those old vans.

The menagerie was first added as a feature of a traveling show in 1802. An Englishman named Woods conceived the idea.

His show was originally so large that it required two wagons to transport his performers. Afterwards he added two cage wagons containing a trained Russian bear, a trained goat, and a few other animals. This constituted the then leading circus.

The performances, in those days, consisted of tight rope walking, jugglery, tumbling and bending. Backward or forward somersaults were unknown, and it is not known who originated them; but it was not done until years afterwards, when the circus became a tented exhibition.

The First Elephant Arrives.

The first elephant was brought from India to England in 1806, and created a sensation. In 1812 this elephant and the circus of which it was the feature, came to America in the ship "Republic" and landed in Boston. It was the first elephant to set foot on American soil, and the circus was a success from the start. It consisted of seven wagons, and when an entertainment was given, these wagons were arranged in a semicircle, end to end. The sides of the wagons were removed and set up against the wheels of the wagons to keep people from looking in. The semicircle of wagons was enclosed by a sheet of canvas and this formed the circus enclosure. It was open to the sky above and the performance was given on a carpet spread on the ground in the center of the ring. This English showman found that American boys would climb trees to see his show, so he stretched a canvas top across his ring and fastened the edges to the wagons of his menagerie. Later, some ingenious Yankee invented a center pole to hold the middle of the canvas top up from the heads of the people. For years after the first center pole was used, the edges of the circular canvas top were fastened to the tops of menagerie and property wagons. Then came the tent with side walls as at present. As circuses grew and multiplied, the menagerie was placed in a separate tent from that in which the performance was given.

Shortly after the Civil War there were about ten of these wagon shows on the road. The keen competition that existed led to the system of emblazoning walls with gaudy pictorial bills and the hanging of crude wood-cut pictures in windows. The house-to-house distribution of illustrated couriers was then inaugurated. Then shows began to travel by rail, at first only when making long "jumps." Then it was discovered that money could be made faster by traveling by rail exclusively and exhibiting only in large cities. Soon all the principal shows owned their own railroad cars. About this time, James A. Bailey, the subsequent Napoleon of the tented universe, began to figure prominently in circus affairs. He informed the writer that he began his career as a bill distributor at $16 per month. He was inordinately ambitious, an indefatigable worker and an innate genius of originality. He gradually won his way to eminence; and became a formidable competitor of P. T. Barnum, the then leading factor in circusdom. A warfare between these two aggressive adversaries ensued which threatened financial disaster to both. Later, negotiations were opened which ended in the consolidation of the two great shows. Bailey rapidly became the leading spirit of the institution, and, very soon, was left in complete managerial control. His next important move was a successful attempt to merge all the leading tent shows into a huge trust, with himself in control.

Prior to the formation of the trust, each circus routed its show independently, and in ignorance of the proposed route of competing companies. Now, each concern is allotted a designated section of country over which it is to travel, and, by pre-arrangement, no other show encroaches upon this domain.

Formerly, every manager strove to keep his itinerary secret from his competitors; but if they chanced to meet, neither wanted to give way to the other. Many bitter and expensive conflicts resulted from this cause. Naturally, small, weak shows would flee from a larger, stronger rival; but when shows somewhat equal in size met it usually meant a fierce struggle; sometimes to a finish. Many prosperous managers were annihilated in these contentions for supremacy.

Bailey first brought about the consolidation of the "Cooper and Bailey" and "Howes Great London" shows. He then combined this joint affair with the P. T. Barnum organization. Afterwards, he gained control of Adam Forepaugh's circus, Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Sells Brothers' Show.

He prevented smaller concerns from becoming sufficiently large to prove rivals by forcing them back to the smaller towns. If one of them dared to exhibit in a city, he billed the place in opposition. He chastised chronic offenders by placing one or two of his large shows on their trail, and, while all parties engaged lost money by this arrangement, yet the fat Bailey wallet could easily endure the drain, while the victim soon became impoverished and stranded. If a large show refused to consolidate, he tried to crush it. The Sells Brothers' rejected his overtures, and he immediately proceeded to exterminate them. Wherever they went he persistently followed, strenuously endeavoring to squeeze them to financial death by sandwiching them between the Barnum & Bailey and the Buffalo Bill shows. Both were extensively advertised in opposition, one to exhibit shortly before and the other shortly after the Sells date. These tactics caused such pronounced diminution in the Sells receipts as to plainly foretell ultimate bankruptcy. He pursued them from the east to the Pacific Coast. Dismayed, they tried to escape by fleeing to Australia. Upon arriving there, they were quarantined and prohibited from landing until after much valuable live stock had been destroyed. This deplorable calamity, supposedly due to the machinations of their relentless enemy, proved their complete undoing, as the meager patronage accorded to their abbreviated show did not pay expenses; and a depleted treasury soon forced them to surrender to the trust.

Bailey next tried to induce the Ringling

Boers were great shots and when they hid behind rocks and took pot shots at us, we quickly discovered that in most cases it was an officer who tumbled.

It used to be cold as the deuce at nights, a good deal the way it is on the California deserts, and, when we could, we gathered in block houses.

Funny what a little world it is! Everyone took it for granted that the Boers would never attack Roberts so everyone hated to stand guard.

So when we landed at a block house we used to stretch strings around it and tie cans to them. If anyone tried to sneak up, he'd strip on the string, the cans would rattle and then we'd get busy.

And what I meant by the world being small was the fact that in one instance every can around our block house was a syrup can from the U. S. A.

There was one Boer down there though who was a bear. I can't think what his name was, right now, but his stunts remind me a lot of those of Gen. Stuart of the Confederate cavalry.

This fellow, with a little troop, every once in a while would charge the whole British army. I remember, just before the surrender at Paardeberg, he busted right through the main camp and took the mess department away with him. That was one day when we all missed our dinner.

Fred drew a cartoon of Roberts's face while it was happening. He was awfully little, you know, and gee, how sore he was!

We got back to America in the spring, just in time to tag the Twenty-sixth Massachusetts to the Philippines.

This proved a big disappointment for it was my turn to break down. All I know about the Philippines is Manila and all I know about Manila is the hospital.

I lay there for days, too weak to move. I remember they had a mosquito bar over the hammock, and once in a while a beetle or a scorpion would fall on it.

Now the sting of a scorpion is not only painful, but almost always spells death, and it was an uncanny sensation to watch one crawl over you, only a few inches out of reach, and know that all that separated you was the frail netting.

So I went back to the States without having seen a bolo and Fred went to work on a New York paper. I haven't seen him since, but I think he's still with it.

The Pan-American Exposition was now opening in Buffalo, so by way of a vacation I arranged to go, and began writing feature stories about the fair and syndicating them.

A little later several of the papers which had been my meal tickets up to now, arranged that I should represent them, which meant that in addition to my specials, I had to keep in touch with their State buildings, and when anyone of importance registered get something from them to send home.

I had a pass to everything and put in quite a bit of time learning to ride the camels in "The Streets of Cairo." It was all very peaceful and lovely until one day when—bingo!

President McKinley was shot making a speech. I trailed him on a bicycle up Delaware avenue to John Milburn's house and then sent a wire to all the papers I represented. Or rather I tried to send it, but the government had commandeered all the wires and nothing went through.

So I called up New York by phone and word went out from there.

Then for fourteen days and nights, a young army of us sat across the street waiting for the end, working in pairs. If the other fellow got it, he sent the message to my papers as well as his.

We had a phone all that time directly connected with every paper we represented, and so far as I know the connection was never broken. It must have cost an awful lot of money.

And maybe, just by way of relief, we didn't turn Canal street inside out, after that.

And T. R., hero of San Juan Hill, became President.

Then I went back to reporting and Sunday feature writing. I guess I was lucky, or something, but I had the reputation of getting everything I went after.

This landed me one of the most unique and interesting jobs I ever had—society sports.

Real society, not the noveau riche, but the genuine article, is really exclusive. It's the hardest thing in the world to get much out of them.

This was especially true of their polo, tennis, country club sports, etc. You could always get the bare news, the scores, etc., but when it came to pictures, real action photos of the big guns and their wives and daughters, there was a big high wall to climb.

Somehow I seemed to get around it, and for quite a spell it was my exclusive work.

Of course there was a lot of trickery, too. For instance, I had a little German camera with a universal focus. It was so tiny it fitted nicely under my arm so that it never was noticed.

Many's the time I have gone out to the Myopia Club when Taft, Senator Lodge, John Hays Hammond and folks of that caliber have been there, and while my photographer was being shooed off the field snapped what I wanted with the little camera.

Three-quarters of the pictures of couples in the divorce courts, the co-respondents, etc., I obtained in that manner and no one ever discovered the secret.

One of the funniest stunts in this line occurred when Tom Lawson, copper king, and author of "Frenzied Finance," announced the engagement of his daughter Marion to a Chicago chap, whose name, as I remember, was Lord.

I went down to Scituate, in which is located Lawson's great stock farm, Dreamwold, to get a picture of Marion. While Miss Marion herself and Mr. Lawson's secretary, Clapp, were vehemently refusing to let my photographer set up his camera, I snapped them with the little one hidden under my arm and the picture was published next day.

It was so punk that the lady chased right down to a studio and had some good ones taken and every paper in town received a set in a few days.

And the big joke of the whole thing was, that at the gate to Dreamwold the watchman had thought I was the groom-to-be and had let me in, though I didn't know this till afterwards.

I could recount funny and thrilling newspaper experiences by the hour, but they really belong in another story. What I have told you is enough to give you an idea of that line of work.

In the meantime I am going back a bit, just to introduce you to the one passion, or rather ambition, I ever had—theatricals.

The first show I ever saw was "Little Lord Fauntleroy," with Elsie Leslie in the title role and Viola Allen as Mrs. Errol. I was a wee kid, but then and there I made up my mind that I was going to be in the theater business.

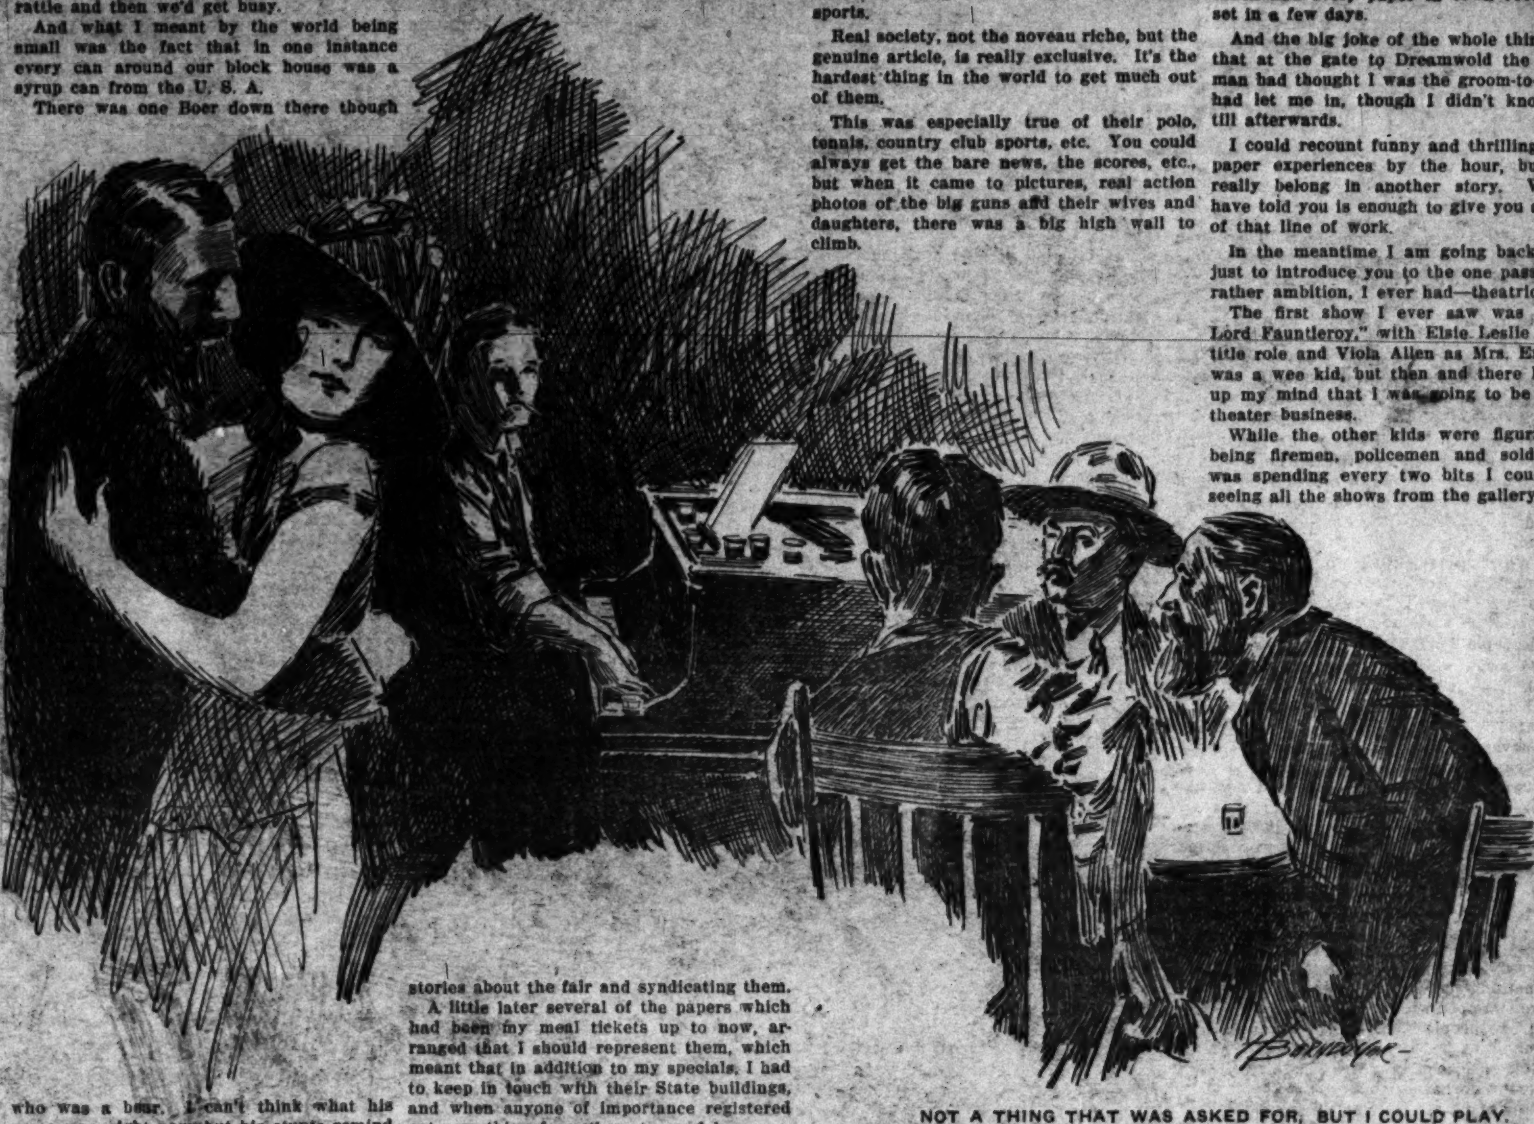
While the other kids were figuring on being firemen, policemen and soldiers, I was spending every two bits I could get, seeing all the shows from the gallery. Rush seats we used to call them.

First off, I aimed to be in the box office, but while still in short pants I realized that the ticket seller had very little chance to see the show. Neither did the actor himself. Nor was I so conceited as to figure I could be the manager, not at first anyway.

And I was still undecided until I had been an office boy for two weeks, as related in the last chapter. Then the big idea came.

I would be the press agent. He saw all the shows, got acquainted with all the people. And if I couldn't be a press agent I would be a dramatic editor. That would do just as well.

And I have been both. Next week I'll tell you about it, how I trouped the country and how I went with a magic show to almost every country on the globe.



NOT A THING THAT WAS ASKED FOR, BUT I COULD PLAY.

Moresnet.

A COUNTRY THAT IS NEITHER KINGDOM, EMPIRE NOR REPUBLIC.

It is probable that but few Americans have even heard of, much less visited, an independent country of 1400 acres, named Moresnet, in the very heart of Europe.

Moresnet has no king, emperor, or president; it has no army—what is more surprising, not even a police force! Moreover, this little land has no daily newspapers, and issues no money, but uses the bills and coins of the countries that surround it. It is not shut off in a distant corner of Europe, but is only a few hours' ride from some of the richest and greatest cities in the world. It is only five miles from Aix-la-Chapelle, where the German invasion of Belgium began, and not much more than twenty miles from Liege.

When, after the fall of Napoleon, the nations of Europe met to determine their respective boundary lines, Prussia and the Netherlands—which then included Belgium—could not agree just where the boundary line between them should be. There was a certain mountain that they both wanted, and neither country was willing to give in about it. At last they decided to make this strip of land, only a mile and a half long and a mile wide, neutral country, belonging to no other nation. In that way Moresnet came into existence, a tiny country of only 1400 acres, much smaller than some of the wheat farms in the West.

In the year 1815 there were only 250 people in Moresnet, but now, it is said, there are more than 3000. A good part of the territory is occupied by the mountain referred to above, in which is a very rich zinc mine. Almost all of the men of Moresnet work either in the mine or in the mine offices.

At first Moresnet was governed by men appointed by the Dutch and Prussian governments, but in 1841 it received a government of its own—a Mayor and a Council of ten. The citizens elect these officials every year. The little community cannot afford a mint, and the people use German or Belgian money indifferently. There are schools, of course, and very good ones, it is said. There is no police force, for the good people are simple in their lives and trust one another perfectly. Each man decides whether he will serve in the Belgian or the German army, and whether he will accept the jurisdiction of Belgian or German courts.

Since Germany is now administering Belgium, it is no doubt governing Moresnet, too.

ORCHARD AND FARM—RANCHO AND RANGE

The Making of Fertilizers. By Thos. C. Wallace.

THE term used for the heading of this article may perhaps be considered as somewhat misleading, as it covers but a portion of the industry of the supply; the materials of fertilizers are to a considerable extent the by-products of industries producing something else, as for instance slaughtering plants and packing-houses and the gas works. From the gas works comes the sulphate of ammonia, which is a by-product of the making and purification of gas; from the packing-house and slaughter pens come tankage, dried blood and bone meal. Primarily these concerns are not engaged in the production of fertilizers, beyond the matter of working up their refuse so that it may be disposed of and utilized. The potash and nitrate salts from the potash industries and the Chile saltpeter, or nitrate of soda, are produced for other purposes besides that of fertilizers, such as making of powders and explosives into which they enter. The producers of these raw materials do not make special effort to make them so that they can be used directly as a fertilizer; these salts often have to be milled to improve their mechanical condition before going into the fertilizer trade. The fish guano—(wrongly called guano, as it does not contain the essentials of guano)—results generally from the refuse of the fish cleaning and packing establishments, though there are on the Atlantic Coast the Menhadden industries in which the production of fish scrap is nearly as important as the production of the oil, but the fish oil industry after all, even in this instance, is the principal business carried on, the fish scrap produced therefrom and used for fertilizers being but a by-product after the oil is recovered. The phosphate industry which is in the mining and grinding of phosphate rock is, however, directly a fertilizer proposition. By far the greatest part of the phosphate entering into fertilizers, and even sold under the term "bone phosphate," is from mined phosphate rock. The difference between bone phosphate and mineral rock phosphate is like the difference between an organized loam soil and a crude mineral soil, such as would result from ground and broken rock. The phosphates are generally acidulated or dissolved before entering into the fertilizers, and sometimes this dissolving is done by the phosphate company and sometimes the fertilizer factories buy the raw rock and carry on their own dissolving work.

Mixing Fertilizer Materials.

Making fertilizers then can be fairly defined as the grouping together and mixing of the different fertilizer materials gathered from the various industries, most of them as I have said produced as by-products. It has been pointed out frequently by the directors of agricultural stations and colleges that the mixing of these materials together adds nothing to their value, beyond making them more convenient for application to the soil in case it is desired to apply more than one of them at an operation. Indeed, the directors of some of these stations have frequently advised the farmers to buy the fertilizer materials and either apply them direct singly or mix them together themselves in proportion suitable to their needs, and it has been pointed out that this would result in considerable economy. This is not, however, always practical, particularly where farmers require to use large amounts and have not the extra labor, time and facilities for properly mixing the materials. In applying fertilizers in small amounts of 100 to 300 or 400 pounds, where they have to be drilled in with the crops, as is the case with grains and other field crops, it has generally been found far preferable from the standpoint of economy to mix, or buy already mixed for the drill, such fertilizer materials as would give the desired proportions of nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash, and better results in field crops can generally be obtained by using such fertilizers, either factory or home mixed, than any attempt to apply one or two of the ingredients in materials singly. In feeding short-lived plants, no matter how rich the soil may be in some one or two ingredients, a benefit can nearly always be obtained by applying a further small amount of these already abundant materials, if that amount is of an easily decomposable or quickly assimilable condition. Consequently though it may not always be the greatest economy, yet the application of the whole three ingredients to short season crops is quite as intelligent and much more practical than an attempt to apply one or two of the ingredients because they represent minimum supplies in the soil. There are of course exceptions to such a rule, as for instance in the application of bone meal to wheat and other grains which are principally interested in obtaining nitrogen and phosphoric acid for the production of grain, and are not so greatly benefitted by potash which eventually lodges largely in the straw, retiring from the ripening grain. In orchard work, however, there is always a question arises as to the economy of mixing these materials, and it is wholly a question of economy, because the materials are not any better for being mixed. In orchard work the grower has various times and seasons at which he may apply any of the fertilizing materials, and it may even be that the feeding of his trees may be more intelligently carried out by the application of ingredients at times best suited to the use of the plant. As I have discussed this before in these columns I will not enter into it now, further than to say that it should have full weight in considering the question of mixing of fertilizers.

Fertilizer Secrets.

Some fertilizer companies lay considerable stress on their methods of mixing their output of fertilizers, which they pretend is a profound secret. These methods are most commonly based upon the sweating process, and the results produced by them are mainly economical and in the interest of the manufacturer; first, by mixing the ingredients with a knowledge of their behavior in the presence of moisture, and allowing them to stand or be worked over as required, until the sweating and heating is accomplished, they can then be safely screened or sieved and put into bags with little or no danger of their caking; second, it allows the manufacturer to use more or less insoluble or unavailable materials, which during the sweating and heating process and under the influence of some materials in the mixture, become dissolved or partially so, so as to be available. Thus cheap material is made marketable. To carry on such an operation requires some knowledge of chemistry and physics, as one of the most important elements of plant food is nitrogen, and it may be thrown out during the heating and sweating process if the material containing it is mixed with other material which can affect it. The best plan for mixing materials which are already in a proper condition to yield up their fertilizer ingredients, or plant food, is to grind them together, which makes the most intimate mixture imaginable. This grinding gives a more even admixture of the materials, so that an analysis of one bag would be about the same as another. If fertilizers are not properly mixed a sample of any one bag may be found not to correspond with the guarantee of the lot. This is one of the reasons in sampling fertilizers ten or twenty bags in each hundred are sampled to be mixed together to get an average of the whole. I have had several analyses taken from different bags of one lot of fertilizer, every bag of which was tagged with a guarantee of the same analysis. The analyses varied so greatly that they could be looked upon as representing the analysis of the lot. Yet a sample taken from every seventh bag of this lot and mixed up shows an analysis approximately even with the tag guarantee. As this was a mixed fertilizer it is clear that the mixing was very indefinitely accomplished, but it also reflects seriously upon the value of the bag as representing the package.

Two Thousand Pounds—of What?

In mixed fertilizers the buyer, if relying upon his own judgment, should know the proportionate amount of each material used in them. It does not seem sufficient to say that the ingredients are derived from nitrate, blood, bone, tankage, guano, animal matter, sulphate or muriate of potash, but that the amounts of each of these materials entering into it should be shown. For instance, let us suggest a mixture containing 9 per cent. available phosphoric acid, 4 per cent. nitrogen, and 2 per cent. of potash; with the nitrogen to the extent of 65 per cent. to 75 per cent. as nitrate, the balance being from organic material carrying a little ammonia salts. Four hundred pounds of nitrate of soda would represent the nitric nitrogen, 125 pounds of high grade dried blood would give the organic nitrogen, the two together making the fertilizer show the amount of nitrogen to equal 4 per cent. Four hundred pounds of high grade double-superphosphate would give enough available phosphoric acid to represent 9 per cent. of the fertilizer. One hundred pounds sulphate of potash would give more than sufficient potash to represent 2 per cent. We have now 1025 pounds of material carrying sufficient plant food to represent in a ton 9 per cent. available phosphoric acid, 4 per cent. nitrogen and 2 per cent. actual potash, we must therefore find 975 pounds to complete the ton. In using such a fertilizer we should know exactly what other materials entered into this to make the ton, and how much there was of each of them. I am not raising the question as to whether these other materials may be valueless, but as to whether or not they may be beneficial; also if we know what the materials are and the amount of each composing the whole fertilizer, we are better able to judge as to the economy of our purchasing the fertilizer or the materials to represent it. Perhaps nothing so forcibly impresses upon our minds the economy and good sense of purchasing the plant food on the unit basis, whether it is in a mixed fertilizer or in a simple material. Available phosphoric acid is no more available because it happens to be mixed up with some different material than that from which it is derived. Available phosphoric acid is not worth any more to us from one material than from another, except in that from the condition of our soil which we should know, it may be more economy that the availability be represented by citric soluble rather than water soluble phosphoric acid, and we may say the same thing of the nitrogen, as the only difference in its value to us is that it may be quickly or slowly soluble or perishable as the case may be, and may therefore better suit our method of feeding our plants or the conditions of our soil. As, however, these different conditions of plant food may be obtained from several materials, it is not difficult for us to judge as to what materials we may purchase it from.

The Stockbridge Theory.

It is not feasible to hand out formulas for the arbitrary mixing of fertilizers, except so far as the ingredients or elements of the fertilizer are concerned. If we lay aside the question of plant food in the soil and consider it more in the light of wild pasturage, we then accept the Stockbridge theory, which ignored the inherent fertility of the soil and came down to the simple proposition of supplying the principal ingredients that must be brought from the soil of which the plants and their fruit consist. Under this plan of varying the proportions of the plant food ingredients in a fertilizer, we are directing our efforts to qualifying the products. We may seek qualities which experience shows can be intensified by the use of phosphoric acid, or nitrogen, potash, lime or indeed of some of the secondary elements such as magnesium, manganese and iron. A formula for fertilizing suggests distinct proportions of nitrogen, phosphoric acid, potash and lime, but it cannot lay down the quantity of any one or all of these ingredients. Some experience must guide in the quantity to use.

Maximum and Minimum.

There is a maximum amount of fertilizer that can be calculated upon. As to the minimum amount, it will depend upon our ability to get it into a fine condition so that it will mix or diffuse most thoroughly through the soil. If a fertilizer, though coarse, is easily dissolved, we will say in ordinary water, so as to become pretty thoroughly diffused in the soil, a comparatively small amount of it will give better results than a fertilizer containing equal amounts and proportions of plant food ingredients, yet in such a condition that it must first be decomposed before it will dissolve. The reason for this is that dissolved materials would pervade the largest area of the soil possible so that the roots should be able to find a considerable proportion of it, while the insoluble fertilizer would be separated at comparatively wide distances in the soil, and would only be reached by comparatively few rootlets. Admitting the principle that formulas can take into consideration only the proportions of plant food and not the quantities, we can proceed to figure them out.

Basis of Commercial Formulae.

Taking a plant many of our readers are interested in, the orange tree, and reconning the amount of the four principal ingredients, we find in the fruit that 19¼ per cent. is represented by nitrogen, 19¼ per cent. by potash, 20 per cent. by phosphoric acid, and 41½ per cent. by lime. Here then is the ground work from which to recon the feeding of the tree. If we find that any one of these ingredients being increased in intensity in the fruit will add to its quality, we will logically increase the percentage of that ingredient, and perhaps lower some of the other ingredients in our formula. If we find that any one of these ingredients can increase the quantity of the fruit we could increase the amount of that ingredient in the fertilizer but not decrease the percentage of the others. Having arrived at a formula which yields the results that we desire as far as quality is concerned, before we undertake to change that formula we should naturally increase the total quantity of the application if we desire to increase the quantity of the crop.

FIELD NOTES.

During the past ten years the experiments in fertilizing for crops in Indiana soils, as carried on by the Purdue University Station, have emphasized the great need for lime application. Independent of other fertilizers or manure lime gave good paying increases in crops, and when used as a basic supplement for stable manure, legumes in rotation, plain phosphates or complete fertilizers, the beneficial influence of the lime stood out very strongly. This is in keeping with the claims of advanced agriculturists that lime is the basic tempering element on healthy soil.

In using Bordeaux mixtures the characters that a copper fungicide must possess should be understood, together with their types and values. Broadly speaking, the mixtures are acid, alkaline or neutral. The acid and neutral mixtures are less injurious to fruit than are the alkaline preparations. The toxic value of the unit copper (which may be understood as the power to destroy the pest) is the same for each phase of the fungicide. The rule for their use is that, when immediate action is required, the unit copper in the acid and neutral mixtures is more effective, while for slower work the alkaline preparations, being more adhesive, continue effective action longer.

THE ADVENTURES OF A ROLLING STONE.

Before the Mast. By N. O. Moss.

CHAPTER II.

Klondike, South Africa, Cuba, Manila and the assassination of McKinley.

THE last of 1896 found me a cabin boy on the schooner Tampam, heading for the Horn.

A few years, not many, had elapsed since the last chapter. These were years of newspaper experience, during which I learned to smoke and drink and play poker, and discovered that, so far as the last went, I was lucky.

I had made one close friend, an artist, Fred and he and I were rooming together because I shocked the people at home too often.

It was the poker game that landed me on the Tampam, along with Fred. We had a pretty good winning one night. Then Fred had a row with his girl and decided the town wouldn't hold them both and as an upshot quit the paper.

Right there I had a great hunch. We had our poker money. We would just work our way around the world. Fred would draw and I would write stories and sell the stuff. It was a regular Jack London stunt, only as you have discovered, I'm no Jack London.

We took a trip down to the beach and while we were down there met the captain of the Tampam. Fred had drawn a picture of him flirting with a girl on the beach and it made a hit. We told him what we had in mind.

"Why not make a trip with me? I'm going around the Horn and way up to Alaska. That's the place to draw great pictures and get stuff to write about. It's a fine country and people don't know much about it."

So away we went, listed as cabin boys, with the understanding that we got our grub but no money, and were to do what he wanted.

I never did find out if a cabin boy on a sailing vessel really has any duties. We used to swab deck, dust the cabin and help the cook.

The steward was really our boss and he had an accordeon, or rather a concertina, which I learned to play on pretty well, and by the time the Tampam hit Valparaiso almost everyone could sing "Rosie O'Grady" in the same key.

Then we hit Frisco.

Fred and I had planned a lark here but something struck us. Before we docked we were swamped with small boats and a million and one people were trying to book a passage.

Gold had been discovered in Alaska.

Now was that anything but destiny?

Fred and I got busy and got up some kits, based on the dime novel reading of our kid days. Funny thing, though, but when we hit the trail for Dawson we were a lot better equipped than most of the prospectors who had come out of the Rockies.

We didn't load ourselves down with shovels and picks and a lot of heavy junk. Somehow I had a hunch a lot of people would die and we could pick up those things close to the diggings and not have to carry them so far. It turned out to be true.

Based on what we had read, rather than on what we really knew, the main things in our equipment were extra sized rubber boots, heavy socks, a pair of blankets apiece, old fashioned, glossy rubber coats, knives, revolvers, rifles, canteens and the regulation coffee, bacon and flour, burning glasses, blinders and pennyroyal.

You've all read about the rush to Klondike. My experience was about like everyone else except we were, comparatively speaking, traveling light.

We took the "inside passage," touching at Sitka and Juneau and then over the ridge to Dawson.

When we quit the Tampam I added one thing to our pack—the concertina.

And maybe you think we weren't kidded. Our pack was the joke of the gang that started out so exuberantly from the coast. We felt like a couple of boobs until the first cold night, and after that we let them laugh.

For rubber, you know, while cold to the touch, is the warmest thing in the world. Recently the army has discovered this and today the regulation sleep pack is a rubber poncho on the ground, then one set of blankets, then the two men, then a set of blankets on top and over all the other poncho. The rubber keeps out the dampness and holds in the heat of the body.

We perspired on nights when it was forty below.

The burning glass was handy too, for we melted snow with it for drinking water, lighted our morning and noon fires with it and only used matches at night. As for the pennyroyal, that came later and if we had had enough we would have been millionaires.

Well, we picked up our axes, picks and shovels all right. Others had been over the trail before us. Funny too, most of the chaps who died were the big husky fellows. Men with muscle somehow don't seem to have the endurance, or else they try to do too much. Fred and I didn't have a bit of trouble except trying to use snowshoes.

Today I can trudge along pretty well on them, but I have never managed to master skiis.

We got a lot of gold at Redmon and at Dawson, but not digging or panning it. I saw a lot of bums become wealthy over night but it never came near me.

On the other hand I have earned as much as $500 worth of dust in a single night with that squeaky concertina I bought from the steward of the Tampam, and Fred got $100 apiece for drawings that took him about half an hour.

Five hundred dollars a night sounds like a lot of money. It is, but remember, we were paying $7 a drink for whisky, and the unlucky guy who couldn't locate a pay claim, was getting from $30 to $60 a day, farming out his muscle to the fellow who had made a strike.

Everything was in proportion, so my $500 a night really was equivalent to about $15 here, which wasn't much considering I was contributing the only music in Dawson.

Then came the woman, and a piano. Someone knew his business for if that piano had ever been shipped tuned, the cold would have snapped every string in it. As it was, they came through slack and I tuned the whole thing with a monkey wrench, played the first tune on it, and discovered I had a permanent job.

A player had come from Seattle but got cold feet at Juneau.

And here was where my being able to play by ear came in great. Not a thing that was asked for, but I could play, or if I didn't know it, the asker would whistle or sing it once or twice and then I'd be O.K.

Every time I'd play a whole flock of drinks would be sent to me, besides the little pokes of dust. At Dawson prices, I've had nearly $1000 worth of whisky reposing on the piano. I'd be that far behind.

When it got warmer, the pennyroyal came in. When it comes to mosquitoes, Alaska makes New Jersey look like 30 cents. You learn that in school.

In a Horatio Alger or a G. A. Henty story I had read that no self-respecting mosquito would go near pennyroyal. That's why we took some with us.

It turned out to be true, too, and when the gang got wise, the stench of the weed was more in demand than any attar of roses that was ever extracted.

If we had waited a little longer we would have been in on the strike at Nome but we didn't stay that long. In spite of all we made we quit broke, but by selling the pennyroyal we not only paid our way back to the States, but across the continent and down to Cuba.

War had just been started when we hit New York once more and figuring that the writing and drawing combination was still good, I managed to hook up with a dozen big papers at a special "space rate" for human interest stuff at the front.

I got permission from Secretary Alger to mess with "any convenient regiment" and use government transportation.

This last was bunk because as horsemen Fred and I were pretty poor. Also we discovered that the bicycle is the only real thing to use in the field.

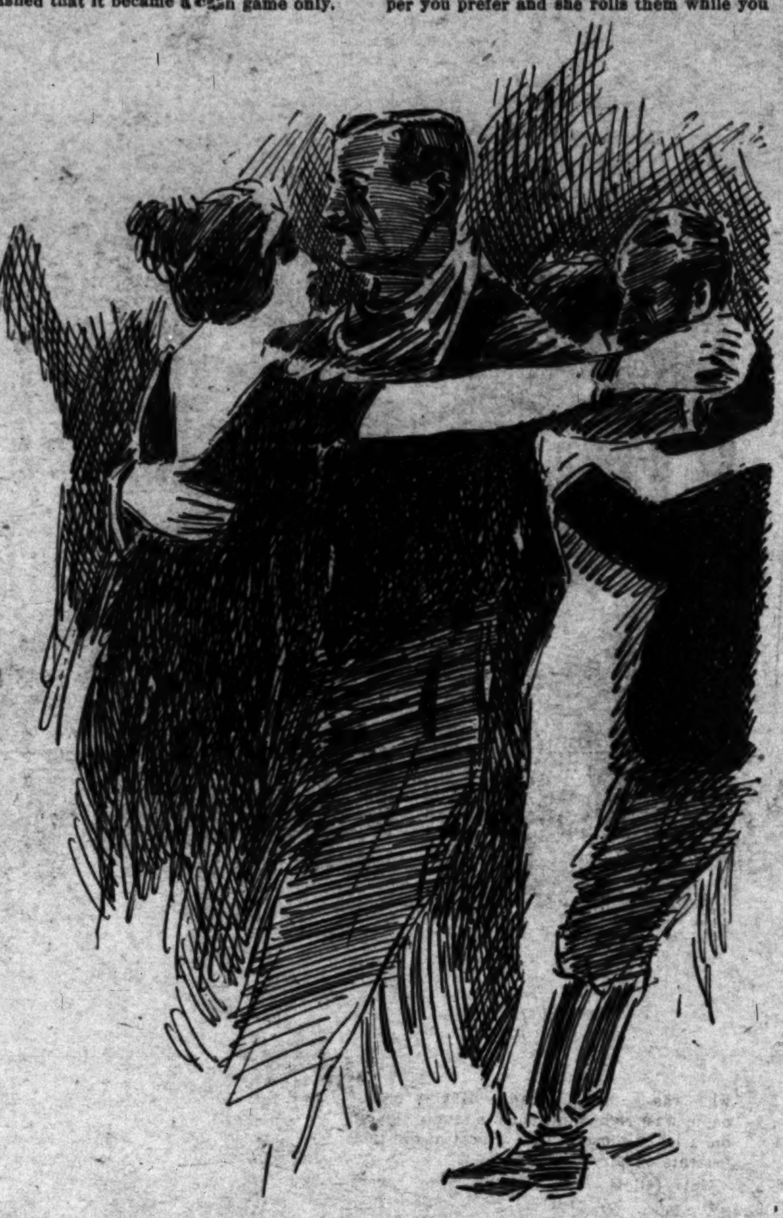
I discovered this just outside Cienfuegos, from which point we connected with the troops which eventually made all the noise and created Teddy at San Juan.

I borrowed a horse from the colored troop, the Tenth if I remember rightly. He ambled along a few feet. Then came a shrill whistle and he flew like the wind. Then another whistle and he stopped like a wall. I kept on going, and landed head first in a bog.

Two bicycles came over on the next dispatch boat.

I could write a volume on embalmed beef for I was with the Ninth Massachusetts and the Twenty-second New York, also the "Dandy Seventh." I've seen many a can of it explode like a bomb, from standing in the sun a few minutes.

We used to play poker a lot, but so many chaps died before their "chips" were cashed that it became a cash game only.



If they had served grog to kill the germs many of the boys might be alive yet, but they didn't.

We free lancers were better off for we could come and go as we pleased, and could forage for native grub. We invented a drink, too, which on account of the way it would twist you up sometimes, we called "stretch."

It was half alcohol (filched from the hospital supplies) half water, and a little lemon juice and sugar to give it taste.

I didn't enjoy Cuba the way I did the Boer war, for the Spaniards were poor shots and a Red Cross sign as big as a house was no protection.

When there was anything doing, it was our stunt to crawl right onto the field and sketch, and fewer bullets came our way than when we were eating, in camp.

It was from a vantage point like this that Fred and I saw the battle of San Juan Hill.

That day proved Teddy Roosevelt another child of destiny. Not detracting a bit from his personal bravery—he was in the thick of it all right—he was no hero. A blunderer if anything. Teddy was in about the same fix as those chaps they wrote "The Charge of the Light Brigade" about.

The colored boys saved them from getting cut to pieces.

Then the battle was really won by machine guns on the wing. I forget now whether the fellow's name was Butler or Parker. I think it was Parker. Anyway, the chap with the machine guns won San Juan even if history doesn't step up like a man and say so.

Of course we had a lot of funny experiences. The most novel, I think, was getting sick on Cuban cigars. We didn't buy them ready made, but the senoritas had trays of them, like the venders of French chewing candy.

You pick out the tobacco and the wrapper you prefer and she rolls them while you wait. In our case, not being experts, we picked stuff that looked good, and mostly it was too green. Talk about kids back of the barn!

Well, Fred got fever, and they shot us both back to Tampa and then up to the detention camp at Point Montauk, but it was a false alarm.

Funny how it turned out though. We wanted to get all the tropic air and the fever out of our veins so we went up to Montreal.

In the afternoons we used to buzz the French girls about what great soldiers we were and at night go down the side hill to the burlesque show. That was hotter even than Cuba.

And that's how it happened that towards the last of '99 when the Boers had Great Britain on the run and Lord Roberts was told to get an army of a quarter million together and got part of it from Canada, that we decided to take a chance and go with them, more to see South Africa than anything else.

This wasn't a war, it was a parade. The trip, as I recall it, was all squealing horses, and prize fights. We went to Portsmouth, took on a lot of Tommies and then hit right down to Capetown.

The interesting part of the Boer War was all over. Modder River, Spion Kop, all the real stuff. We didn't know it for sure then, but I have heard since that Lord Roberts and his army of 250,000 men had only 35,000 Boers opposed to them.

No wonder it was a clean sweep.

We had a sense of security, too, for the

MAKING THE CITY AND HOME BEAUTIFUL.

Gardens, Streets, Parks, Lakes. By Ernest Braunton.

Plants of the Bible.

THE writer is wondering if there is a place of any sort in California planted solely to those things mentioned in the Bible. A dozen years ago a list was furnished the pastor of a church at San Dimas and the grounds about this church were planted with a few "bible plants," but the area was limited. No doubt they are alive and thriving at present. It seems regretable that churchyards cannot here be planted and made beautiful, as is such a common practice in England, and to some extent in New England and elsewhere in the United States.

Of trees mentioned in the Bible there are many well known everywhere and growing wherever conditions will permit. The climates of California and Palestine are much alike, as is the topography, vegetation, soils, water supply, etc. Some years ago, Aaron Aronsohn, Director of the Jewish Agricultural Experiment Station at Haifa, Palestine, was in Los Angeles and the writer had the pleasure of his company for two days in looking over the fruits and ornamental plants of this section. Mr. Aaronsohn is author of several valuable bulletins, one of which: "A Botanical Survey of Palestine," was issued by our own government. In it the author shows how similar crops and native vegetation grow in California and Palestine. It is sincerely hoped the British now in Palestine, and close to the gates of Jerusalem, may be able to turn the Holy Land over to its rightful owners and that we may get in closer touch with that country than is possible under Turkish rule.

Trees mentioned in the Bible and which are growing or will easily grow here, are: Carob or St. John's bread, cedar of Lebanon, almond, oak, olive, palm, acacia, pistacia, jujube, pine, tamarisk, styrax and paliuris. Scientific names could be given for all these and others, but that is not the object of the present article. In shrubs there are also many, among them: juniper (prostrate,) box, myrtle, boxthorn and other classes as the grape vine, etc. Among small plants are mentioned: anise, dill, coriander, mustard, mint, spikenard, mallow, cypress, wormwood, calamus or sweet cane, wheat, hyssop, mandrake, altheas, lilies and a host of smaller plants, bulbs, etc. Even in vegetables we find in the Bible the names: beans, cucumber, garlic, leeks, lentils, melons, mustard and onions. Should one desire a scriptural lawn (for grass is frequently mentioned,) there are nearly a hundred grasses native to Palestine and several of them will qualify as good lawn grass.

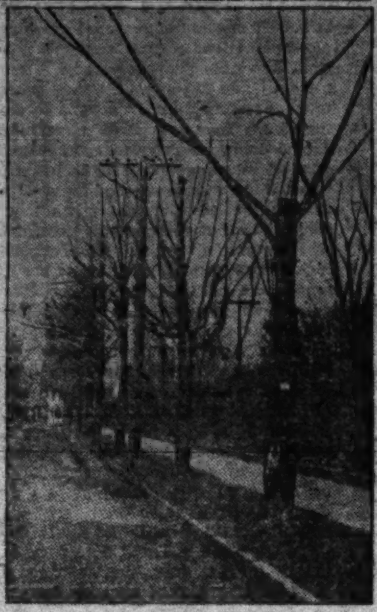
Electrical Injury to Trees.

The greater part of the injuries to trees from an electric source have been decidedly indirect as far as Southern California is concerned. The great increase in the use of electric energy has brought poles and wires everywhere, to the great mutilation of street trees, and the mechanical injuries usually come from guys who string guy wires. But electrical currents do much injury to street trees, but vastly more in Eastern States, where lightning is common, than here, where the latter is almost unknown. A small amount of electricity stimulates plant life, as it will animal life, but large amounts are detrimental to all life.



SHOWING DISFIGUREMENT OF TREES CAUSED BY HIGH-TENSION ALTERNATING CURRENT WIRES.

Gardening in the Tropics.

Several inquiries have from time to time been received from those who wish to procure an illustrated work on tropical gardening. Such books are not common, as are those for use in the temperate zones. The one most widely disseminated is "Gardening in the Tropics," by G. Marshall Woodrow, one-time professor of botany in the College of Science, Poona. The work is 635 pages and nearly a hundred illustrations.

Azaleas that have been flowered for the season may be plunged, pot and all, in a shaded portion for the summer, where they may be sprayed occasionally with cold water and the atmosphere be kept from becoming very dry. As new growth comes out, every shoot should be pinched to keep the plant from getting to big and out of shape. Carry along quietly until nearly time to show buds and then begin feeding with liquid manure. Begin lightly and feed but once in two weeks, afterward increasing the strength in weekly doses until the first flower appears. During the second season repot in new soil.

Narrow Parkways.

In the main those trees used for street planting should do better in residential districts than they do in their native habitat. It is possible to give them better supplies of food and water than nature grants them and we may nearly as easily supply them with equally good soil. The chief drawback to a vigorous health is the narrow parkway, which on the average street is not more than three feet wide. With concrete walk on one side and paved street on the other it is impossible that the tree can receive the necessary aeration of the soil or that food and water is furnished in sufficient quantities.

Over-planting of Streets.

There is no sort of tree grown that should be planted on streets as close as twenty-five feet to each other. It is not desirable, in any case, that a green tunnel should be built or that green walls at street sides are desirable or admired by any. The individuality of a tree is one of its strongest traits or points of character and it should have ample space in which to develop its natural form and outline. Thirty-five feet should be fixed by law as the minimum distance, and any street will, in a few years, be well embellished if one sort of tree is uniformly planted at distances of fifty feet apart.

Lime for Heavy Soils.

For heavy close soils no treatment will bring such good results as liming. Ground limestone, or thorough air-slaked lime may be applied at the rate of ten pounds to each hundred square feet. If quick-lime is used one-half the amount, or five pounds, will prove sufficient. The amount of water-slaked or hydrated lime to use lies about midway between these amounts.

California Peonies.

The present cool spring has proven a beneficial time for the flowering of many plants that cannot endure heat. Peonies, so common eastward, so rare in California, have blossomed as well this spring in local gardens as could be hoped for. Peony roots must be kept cool, like clematis, anemones, camellias and a host whose tops like at least a goodly portion of the days sunshine. One of the secrets of growing these plants lies in the use of a good mulch so that soil and roots are at all times both moist and cool. Morning and evening sun are beneficial. Hot, midday sun usually burns both blossoms and foliage.

Uses of Lavender.

"Admiring Reader" wishes to know if lavender has a medicinal value and if it prove a paying commercial crop. Lavender is not considered of medicinal value now, though it was fifty years ago. The flowers are used for perfuming and also put among clothes, especially woolen stuffs, to keep moths away, but its chief value lies in the oil which may be extracted by distillation from all parts of the plant. This oil is the basis of the perfume known as lavender water and a few drops used against moths are as effective as a hatful of flowers.

Lilies in Running Water.

A correspondent writes to ask if water lilies will thrive in running water. There are no wild species that naturally grow in water having any perceptible movement, from which we should argue that they will not be a success except in comparatively still water. The writer has seen water lilies in the wilds in several parts of the United States, and has read of their native habitat in tropical lands and they do not grow where water moves enough to be readily discerned.

Spray for Leaf-eaters.

A spray which is effectual on all worms and insects that eat foliage of ornamentals and which will prove equally effectual for cabbage worms and similar pests of the vegetable garden is made simply by dissolving one pound of Paris green in fifty gallons of water. Instead of Paris green may be used two pounds of arsenate of lead in powdered form or four pounds in paste form. Of course these sprays should not be used on edible plants except when the latter are small and young.

Severe English Winter.

England has this past winter (1916-1917) experienced one of the coldest winters ever known there. At the Royal Botanic Gardns, Kew, shrubs of species found growing wild on local mountains up to 3000 or more feet had all their leaves and tender growth frozen off and some of the more tender Californian natives were killed, as were plants gathered from many parts of the world.

Peas, Beans and Beets.

HOW TO PLANT AND CULTIVATE ALL THESE FAVORITES.

Garden peas are a favorite crop in the home garden, and as they are not easily injured by light frosts, they may be planted as soon as the soil can be put in order in the spring, according to the specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. By selecting a number of varieties it is possible to have a continuous supply of peas throughout a large portion of the growing season. In order to accomplish this, plantings should be made every ten days or two weeks until warm weather comes. The first plantings should be of small-growing, quick-maturing varieties, such as Alaska, First and Best and Gradus. These kinds do not require supports. They should be followed by the large wrinkled type of peas, such as Champion of England, Telephone and Prize Taker. These may be supported on brush, on strings attached to stakes driven in the ground, or on wire netting.

Peas should be planted about two to three inches deep in rows three to four feet apart. Some gardeners, however, follow the practice of planting in double rows six inches apart, with the ordinary space of three to four feet between these pairs of rows. With varieties requiring support this is a good practice, as the supports can be placed in the narrow space between the rows.

Beans are more susceptible to cold than peas and should not be planted until danger of frost is past and the ground begins to warm up. They are, however, among the most desirable vegetables that the home gardener can raise. There are many different kinds and varieties of beans, but for garden purposes they may be divided into two classes—string and Lima. Both classes are grown commercially over the greater part of the East and adapt themselves to a wide diversity of soils and climate. They grow rapidly and, therefore, leave the area in which they have been planted free for another crop. To secure a continuous supply, it is desirable to make plantings at intervals of ten days or two weeks from the time that the ground is reasonably warm until hot weather sets in.

Both string and Lima beans are subdivided into pole and brush types. The pole Lima bean should be planted with from eight to ten seeds in the hill and after the plants become established should be thinned to three or four. The hills should be four or five feet apart. Bush Lima beans are planted five or six inches apart in rows thirty to thirty-six inches apart. Bush beans of the string type may be planted somewhat closer—the plants standing three or four inches apart in rows from twenty to twenty-four inches apart if hand cultivation only is to be employed.

Beans of any kind should not be planted any deeper than is necessary to secure good germination. This should never be over two inches and on heavy soil it should not be more than one and one-quarter to one and one-half inches.

Beets can be planted comparatively early in the season. It is not necessary to wait until the ground has become warm, if the danger of frost is past. The seed should be sown in drills fourteen to eighteen inches apart and covered to a depth of about one inch. As soon as the plants are well up they should be thinned to stand three to four inches apart. From two to three plantings should be made in order to have a continuous supply of young, tender beets.

When Everybody Flies.

[Portland Oregonian:] At Molalla the other day a farmer who spoke against the road-bond issue offered the interesting prediction that the automobile would go the way of the bicycle and that everybody would sooner or later be flying in the air. What was the use of spending money on roads?

Speed the day when the farmer can load a ton of potatoes on an airplane and sail away by the shortest possible route to the market place.

But that reminds us that location of market places, and of large cities, too, has been controlled to a large extent by trade arteries and that location of trade arteries has been governed by water grades, land defiles and general topographical conditions.

When every farmer flies the main factors that have produced towns and cities in their present locations will also have disappeared. The point we make is that future cities may be built upon the hilltops and mountain peaks and that present towns and cities may decay.

If advance in air navigation is an argument against building roads, it is an argument against municipal improvements. It is unwise to pave streets, build Courthouses, extend sewers, lay water mains. The thing to do is to hibernate and trust to inventors.

Even so, the thought encroaches that the proposed paved roads would make excellent landing and starting places for the airplanes.

Nothing Elaborate.

[Birmingham Age-Herald:] "Have you made your plans for the summer?"

"Yes," answered the citizen of modest means. "I'm going to invest in an extra Palm Beach suit and have my last year's Panama cleaned. After that I expect to stand pat and wait for cold weather."

[illegible] to the other. The seed is pieces of green cane which are laid in the furrows, so that they form a long pipe of cane reaching from one end of the row to the other. Each little piece of cane has a bud, or eye, at every joint, and when covered with earth these buds sprout and make their way through the soil. As they come through the ground they look like corn which has been planted with the drill.

The cane grows rapidly. By August it is as tall as a man, and along about the middle of October it is about twice as high as the average cornstalk and is ready for cutting. It is now chopped off close to the ground, and carried on wagons or on the cars of the plantation railroads to the mills. Almost every plantation has its own mill, and it is in these mills that the juice is squeezed out and boiled down into what is known as the raw sugar of commerce. This is the sugar that is used in the great refineries, which put it through the various machines and treatments that transform it to the granulated sugar, powdered sugar and white lumps used on our tables

We shall now take a walk through the refinery at Chalmette and see how such sugar is made. I warn you at the start that the trip may be a Sabbath day's journey, and that you will have to walk miles before you come out. It will pay you to go, however, for this refinery represents the highest type of cost-efficiency work in the great industries of today. It is an example of what the country will have to do in mobilizing our industries and of what we must have if we would make Uncle Sam independent in peace and in war.

As we go through the factory you will see how each item is taken into account. Everything possible is done by machinery. There are comparatively few men employed, and the savings are shaved to the thousandths of a cent. The vapor that arises from the sugar is distilled, that no molasses may be lost in the fumes. The steam is worked over and over again, and gravity carries the raw sugar from process to process. It is first lifted by machinery to the top of the building, and when it comes to the bottom it is almost pure sugar. It is then carried again to the top and dropped by gravity through other processes, which, aided by steam and electricity, finally land it in the cars that carry it all over the Union.

Nothing is done by guesswork. The sugar is sampled when it comes from the steamer, and a half dozen different chemists analyze every lot to see just how much pure sweetness it contains. As it goes on through the processes the sugar and sirup are tested again and again, some of the work being so delicate that scales which will give you the exact weight of a single hair from a baby's eyebrow are used in fixing the quantities. They will weigh to the one thirty-thousandth of an ounce.

We first go to the wharf and watch the steam crane lift the bags of raw sugar from the holds of the steamers and drop them on the floor of the warehouse. Here they are weighed and samples of each lot are sent off to the chemists. Then the great bags are lifted, six at a time, by the Telpher car, which operates on an overhead track and runs along like a trolley high up under the roof. The tracks of the trolley connect with the storage compartments. The bags fly this way and that, high over our heads. They go from one room to another and finally drop on the piles just where they are wanted.

Each bag weighs 350 pounds, and the six more than a ton. Nevertheless, that ton flies through the air as fast as the little cash box on the wires of a department store. The machine seems like a gigantic cash carrier, save that the basket is operated by a man who sits in a cage at the back and directs the car over the track by pressing a button or moving a lever.

We follow one of the loads. It goes into a great wareroom in which 250,000 of these sugar bags have already been stored. They are piled up by the carrier as easily as though they were feathers. Nevertheless, they weigh millions of pounds and there is enough sugar in this room to give the whole United States a taffy-pulling. It covers the better part of an acre, and it is a solid mass of sugar bags, forty feet high. At the present prices, more than $5,000,000 worth of raw sugar is piled up on this floor.

But see! The mammoth cash carrier has picked up six of the bags and is starting them on their way to the mill. It flies round the curving tracks overhead, takes them into another room and drops them in front of a chute. Here they are again sampled, and the samples go off to the chemical assayer. The bags are left right in front of two men, who stand in pits, so that they may not have to bend in opening them and emptying the sugar.

The first process is cleaning the raw sugar. As the sugar comes in from the plantation mills each of the brown crystals has a slight coating of sirup. This is washed off and the sirup is saved. There is also considerable dirt mixed with the crystals, so much, indeed, that 200 barrels of pure mud are taken out of the run of each day. All of this mud has been paid for as sugar, so that at the present prices it costs the company something like $4000 a day for pure mud alone.

After the first washing, the sugar is melted to a sirup, and this sirup is also washed. It is now yellow, and the color of a thick dark molasses. It has to be filtered again and again, until it is as white as the sugar sold in our stores. The filtering is done in great tanks filled with charred bones, ground so that they look like gunpowder. This stuff is known as bone black. It takes the coloring matter and other impurities out of the sirup and makes it as white as alcohol when it comes from the still. Bone black is costly, but the refinery uses 2,000,000 pounds of it every twelve months. As the sirup goes through the filters it grows lighter and lighter, until at the end it is as clear as the purest spring water.

The next process is turning the clear sirup back into sugar, and that into crystals of just the right size. It seems strange to figure on the size of a grain of sugar, but the sirup has to be built up in such a way that the grains will be uniform throughout. This is done by steaming and boiling, and measuring the grains by means of the polariscope. It would require too much detail to give the whole process, but the result is the pure white granules used on our tables. This sugar falls into great bins each of which holds 14000 barrels, or some millions of pounds. It is carried from there again to the top of the mill, and much of it passes through other processes, which reduce it to the kinds of sugar that the people demand and into the packages required by the trade.

In making cut sugar, for instance—I mean the little square lumps used for coffee and tea—the soft sugar is reduced to slabs, about fourteen inches long, ten inches wide and an inch thick. The slabs are divided into squares and dropped upon racks on an endless belt, which forms a river of concentrated sweetness as it moves continuously on. The racks are placed in the furnace, or oven, and when the sugar comes out it is as solid and hard as when sold in the stores.

It is interesting to see them pack sugar. The plant has machines that make paper boxes, and fill them at the rate of a hundred a minute, pasting and marking each box, without the touch of a hand. Other machines are used for filling bags of all sizes, down to the one or two pound packages sold in the stores. The sugar is weighed by machinery, and the tops of the bags are sewed by sewing machines made for the purpose. It is the same in packing the sugar in boxes of various sizes, and putting it up into barrels.

Even the counting of the barrels and packages is done by machinery. A record is made of the barrels as they pass through the warehouse on the way to the cars. Each barrel has its weight marked on it, and an adding machine upon wheels, which looks for all the world like a baby carriage, is pushed around from barrel to barrel, and the weight of each taken down by touching the keys.

All this results in a saving which greatly reduces the cost of the sugar. The human labor item is so cut down that the refinery seems almost to run itself. I passed through large rooms filled with machines, with only two or three men in sight. The total number of employees in the plant is a little more than 1000, and the output equals almost ten barrels of sugar per day to each man on the ground.

A Trombone Troubadour.

BY EUGENE BROWN.

SHOULD my country require the services of a fearless and painstaking trombone player I can be found at midnight at the old mill.

It is true that I cannot march with the eager endurance of a few seasons back, but I could have a little red wagon drawn by a trained goat, which would enable me to not only keep up with the army but ever and anon cheer it on to fresh endeavor by harmonious blasts from my favorite instrument.

I would prefer to be pulled by a goat rather than a human being as the animal is a compact creature with a limited road clearance and would not get in the way of the instrument. One must have room in order to play a slide trombone.

For a time I dwelt in one of those narrow city apartments where you have to lean out in the airshaft to take off your collar, and it was almost impossible for me to keep up my trombone practice without trespassing on somebody else's flat. About the only musical exercise a man could take was with the jewsharp or some other tool of harmony that can be played with the elbows close to the waist.

So I moved out into the country to give my art a chance. The rest of the inhabitants of the apartments regretted my departure, but bore it bravely. They figured that what was my loss was their gain, and there was no use in holding post mortems over a lost chord. Now I am out in the open where I have practically no competition save that furnished by a small swarm of Jersey heifers. When I get out with them we have what we call a toot ensemble.

Ever since I have been able to think I have been an ardent admirer of the trombone. As a lad there was always a mystery about its operation. The wizard to me was not the cuffless gent who cooked omelets in a plug hat but the baldheaded guy in the orchestra who would run a yard and a half of brass tubing down his throat and then carelessly drift out the stage door for the Dutchman's and lap up a scuttle of suds. He had a forked mustache and this I thought was due to the friction of his instrument. When the band went forth it was always the man with the trombone who held my chiefest attention and I would follow along at his side for blocks, looking up at him with undisguised admiration. The tuba and the double bass could hold more but the slide trombone could dodge in and out of the human system without leaving a scar or choking a man to death. When other kids planned to be pirates or policemen I promised my folks that I would become a trombone player.

It is my proudest boast that I have been able to keep my word. This shows what earnest and tireless devotion to an ideal will accomplish. There are no heights that may not be scaled; no depths that cannot be plumbed. Andrew Carnegie has plenty of money and is rich in that way, but he cannot wheeze a note on the trombone. Had he played in brass instead of steel he might now be one of our finest trombone performers instead of a mere discredited millionaire.

Trombone players are made, not born. There is no such thing as heredity when it comes to oozing harmony out of a couple of yards of polished plumbing. It is only by the application of trained and loving fins that man is able to throttle and subdue the trombone and cause it to exude its ecstatic melody.

Once accomplished, however, it is an inspiration. It is said that Tyrus Cobb learned to slide to first by watching the deft manipulation of a skilled trombone artist. The trombone is one of the few instruments that slide. It is a cousin to the trumpet and of the same family, but is vastly superior in development. It has a reach like Jess Willard but is lacking somewhat in waist measurement. I am told that the trombone was invented by Tyrtaeus just 2600 years ago this afternoon. So that it has a history almost as long as its keel measurement. I do not know who Tyrtaeus was, but I understand he is dead. If I knew where he was buried I would like to visit his grave at sundown with my instrument and exhale a few measures of that Chopin stuff.

The trombone is no connection with the T-bone of commerce, but seems more like an offshoot of the jawbone of human anatomy. Mr. Wombwell, the Englishman who owned the first wild animal show, had a band made up entirely of trombone players, and said to be the only one of its kind in history. It was the trombones that kept his animals wild.

By itself the trombone is not a highly favored instrument. It needs companionship. When I used to take my trombone and go down by the orchard to serenade Hattie Sweeley we never seemed to make a hit and once I came back with my instrument nicked with bird shot. Somebody must have mistaken me for an owl.

But in band or orchestra the trombone is appreciated for its real worth. Its rather solemn and mournful notes furnish the proper repression for the cornet and piccolo. But its music is martial and belongs to the heavy side of war. I think Wilson is making a mistake in not sending the Colonel and me to the trenches. If the Colonel got out in front and showed his teeth whilst I stood beside him and played a few selections on the trombone the war would soon be over. The Germans would throw down their arms and hasten back to their firesides.

One of the kings of England had a slide trombone, but the hapless ruler couldn't play on it. He was George III and he got it as a present from the King of Naples when it was dug out of the ruins of the lost city of Pompeii in 1738. The man who was playing it must have inhaled a lot of lava as the instrument was all cluttered up and the piston refused to work. But it proved that the trombone had a history and standing back to the days of old Pompeii anyhow, and it may be that Nero used it to egg on his lions. The trombone is practically the sackbut of sacred history and English literature and is also found on some of the venerable canvases of the old masters. In La Croix there is a cathedral ceiling decoration showing an angel playing a slide trombone. This didn't help to popularize the golden city and it is said that Lucrezia Borgia embarked on her career of crime because she feared she might have to play a trombone did she become an angel. Paolo Veronese, the eminent brushist, in his painting of the marriage in Cana, has a figure of a full grown negro playing the slide trombone. There is no doubt whatever of the vivid imagination of the artist.

The trombone has a compass of three octaves but a performer has to have the breathing apparatus of a seal to get into the depths.

It also takes a long reach. I had to take lessons of John D. Sullivan and Frank Gotch before mastering the instrument. After that I was so strong that on one occasion I blew the curves out of the tubing and had to take the instrument to a plumber to have it fixed.

But everything is all right now and if the country needs a good, steady and reliable trombone performer in its hour of stress I can be reached by postal card.

Rookies Stopped for "Whoa."

[Des Moines Register:] Councilman Tom Fairweather is rounding his Highland Park drill company into condition for service, but Tom admitted that there are a few little technical things about the military game which his men have not yet mastered.

"They're a promising bunch," Fairweather explained, "but you can't make a soldier in one day."

Fairweather had had his company outdoors for marching drill. Inside he had explained military terms and he thought his men had acquired the fundamental commands.

"Forward march," Capt. Fairweather shouted.

The men marched off in splendid order. Then Tom, marching at the head of the column, had an evil thought. "I'll try them out," he said to himself.

"Whoa!" yelled the commander. And every man stopped and came at attention.

The captain bristled up and proceeded to rake his men over the military coals he himself had undergone during the Spanish-American War. "You must think you are a bunch of horses," Fairweather shouted. "When I want you to stop I will give the command 'Halt.'"

The councilman-commander has had wooden guns made for his company. They are of the regulation size, and Fairweather says they serve admirably for drill purposes.

Fairweather's company has its armory in the gymnasium of the Highland Park Christian Church.

[Cassell's Journal:] The Colonel (furiously:) I understand that someone at the mess the other night referred to me as a blithering old idiot.

The Adjutant (apologetically:) I'm sure, sir, none of the junior officers would speak so disrespectfully. It must have been someone who knows you quite well.

ELIMINATING CULLS AND UNPROFITABLES.

Poultry for Boys and Girls. By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

TO ELIMINATE the wasters and constitutionally weak has always been regarded by experienced breeders as a good practice; in times, however, when all feeding stuffs rule high, it becomes more than good practice—it is a necessity if profits are to be maintained. Not during the past twenty years has culling been so essential to the breeder's prosperity as it is just now. Many poultrymen are selling off all the surplus stock that the market will take, while here and there others are going out of the business. These factors, though negative in their influence, need not necessarily cause a stampede by flooding the market. It is really a time in which to put one's house in order. There are those who predict a sharp advance in the price of eggs within the near future, which will of course rebound to the credit of the fellow who "sits tight," and later on takes advantage of changing conditions. In the meantime close culling will remove the wasters, cut down the drones and light performers and so lessen the outgo of cash for feed and labor.

There is scarcely a flock, even in the hands of expert breeders, in which some culling is not a desirable factor. A robust vigor is never dominant in every individual that is hatched, nor is it possible to rear all the healthy along lines of profitable production; accidents will happen, disease will creep in, and so eliminating the weak and ailing becomes a necessity in an intelligent poultry routine.

The experienced eye can cull intelligently and without much trouble; but the novice and beginners will find a few suggestions helpful just at this time when profits are close to the danger line of cost of production. Deformities that are pronounced should at once be removed. In cases where these do not affect the table qualities, the specimens can be maintained until sufficiently advanced to be eaten, but no longer. General weakness and worthlessness, due to mismanagement or constitutional faults, will result; birds of this character are usually wasters and should be removed. They simply will not develop. Birds showing disqualifications and faults according to the Standard of Perfection, such as feathers on smooth-legged varieties, and vice versa; color defects in plumage, imperfections in type, faulty in head and leg points, are not worth maintaining for stock birds, but in the case of pullets may be reserved for egg production provided there is room and their performances are good; otherwise they better be sent to market together with the cockerels. In females, all who are not up to an annual egg-production of 125 to 150 had better be eliminated, while those below these figures are out of the running with the present price of grain. Obviously there are some blemishes that may be outgrown, such as black in white and buff plumage, red in white earlobes and the reverse, poor muscular development, scant plumage, etc. But where conservation of resources is imperative, it may be the part of wisdom to take no chances.

Culling is an art that is not to be mastered in a day. When it comes to the fine points that count with the fancier and the expert catering to the market for breeding stock and exhibition specimens, it is quite another story. In either event, however, culling enhances the stamina and performance of flocks wherever it is intelligently practiced; it also tends to the conservation of resources and correspondingly should enhance profits. Study and practice it with your flock in these agitated times of world-wide strife and food production and feeding economies.

A Plea for the Boys and Girls.

In connection with the home gardening movement something may also be said for home poultry culture, and more especially in an appeal to the boys and girls. Here is a work that ought to enlist the support and exploitation of the local poultry associations, for it not only opens a field for food production and conservation, but it also broadens the industry. Here and there evidence of progress in this line of co-operative endeavor comes to us in the poultry literature of the day. For instance, the Western Poultry Fanciers Association, in co-operation with the Board of Education, has inaugurated a Boys and Girls Poultry Club work in the public schools of Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

CALIFORNIA-BRED BIRDS WIN AT NEW YORK SHOW.
First prize cock, hen, cockerel and pullet, White-faced Black Spanish fowl, at the 1917 New York (Madison Square) Poultry Show. Bred, owned and exhibited by Robert A. Rowan, Los Angeles, Cal.

At this date more than 300 boys and girls have taken a lively interest in hatching and raising flocks of chicks. The organization started the movement by offering forty sittings of Standard-bred eggs; or two to each building. One was for the best 300 word essay on the subject: "Why Standard-bred Fowls are Better Than Mongrels;" the second for the best free hand drawing of a Standard-bred fowl, and five reasons why it excelled.

At the winter show by the association, a junior poultry exhibit is going to be given by the Cedar Rapids Boys and Girls Club. Prizes worth while will be offered in connection with a day of poultry institute. Ninety per cent. of the stock that is being raised is Standard-bred, and many a sitting of eggs has been ordered from various States to complete breeds not at present raised in that location. All of which carries a suggestion to California poultry organizations.

Under the auspices of the American Poultry Association over one hundred exhibits were given last year by boys and girls under the head of "Junior Department" in its regular exhibitions. With the agitation for food that work along these lines has much to commend it just at this time.

Water Glass and Shade.

Mrs. M. C. of Los Angeles writes to The Illustrated Times Weekly that she has so often been intelligently advised in her poultry operations by this department that she is encouraged to ask information on the following two points:

(1.) I have some water glass left over from last season which has become hard and dried. Is it possible to make it soluble again, and how can it be done?

(2.) How long can one keep eggs before putting into water glass?

(1.) Water glass is chemically known as sodium silicate, and by a process of evaporation tends to cake and harden. Being without specific information bearing on the question of its re-use, it is nevertheless our judgment that better results are to be obtained when used fresh, rather than remelting.

(2.) Eggs should be preserved fresh—the sooner after being laid the better. If stored in a cool, dry place, free from odors of decaying vegetable matter they might be allowed to remain a week, though all the books say only for a few days. In any event, they must be sound, no faulty shells should be used for preservation.

As supplemental to her queries our correspondent reports good results with chloride of lime in ridding her houses of red mites. As a means for providing a natural shade she has found hop vines ideal. They die down in winter when sunshine is a consideration, and supply a luxuriant shade in summer. Of the leaves the chickens eat freely, evidently being fond of them and appreciative of their tonic character.

In Growing Poultry Remember:

That stale bread has a good feeding value for poultry. To avoid any taint from age, heat it thoroughly then crush when it can be fed in the mash foods.

That hulled oats are preferable to any other method of preparation (excepting possibly sprouted,) clipped oats are second choice, and ordinary oats last.

UNCLE SAM'S IMMENSE SUGAR BOWL.

It is Full. By Frank G. Carpenter.

New Things in the Industry

THE UNITED STATES DEPENDENT UPON SUGAR--THE BIGGEST SWEET TOOTH OF THE WORLD AND HOW IT IS FED--SKY-HIGH SUGAR AND THE PRICES--THE CANE PLANTATIONS OF LOUISIANA--A VISIT TO OUR LARGEST SUGAR REFINERY--A TRIUMPH OF MODERN COST.

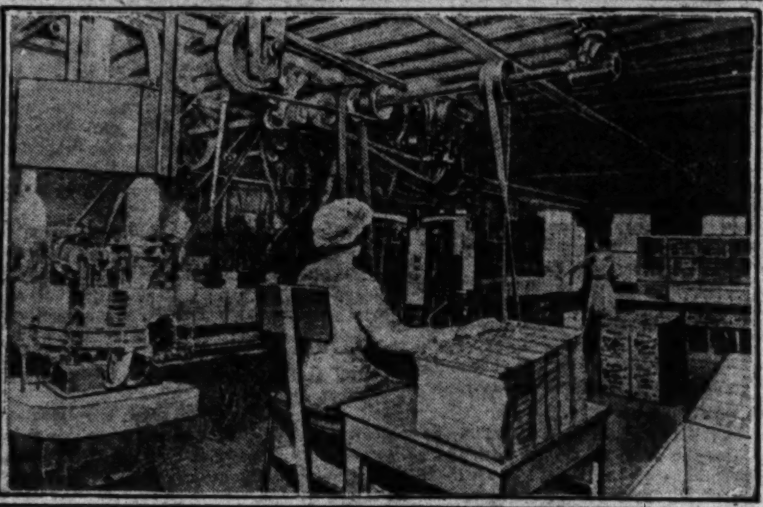
FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

CHALMETTE (La.)—I have come here to give you a peep into Uncle Sam's sugar bowl. It is full enough now, though the prices are kissing the skies. It will be different if the war is prolonged, and we may yet have our sweetening doled out by the nation at so much per head. Sugar is vitally connected with all work that requires great endurance. Germany thought otherwise. During the first year of the war she cut down her beet acreage to give more room for cereals and potatoes, but the need for sugar was shown to be such that she changed her policy at the next planting time. It has been found that the soldiers in the trenches require much more sugar than they do at home, and from this standpoint the American army will consume more per capita than any other body of soldiers on earth.

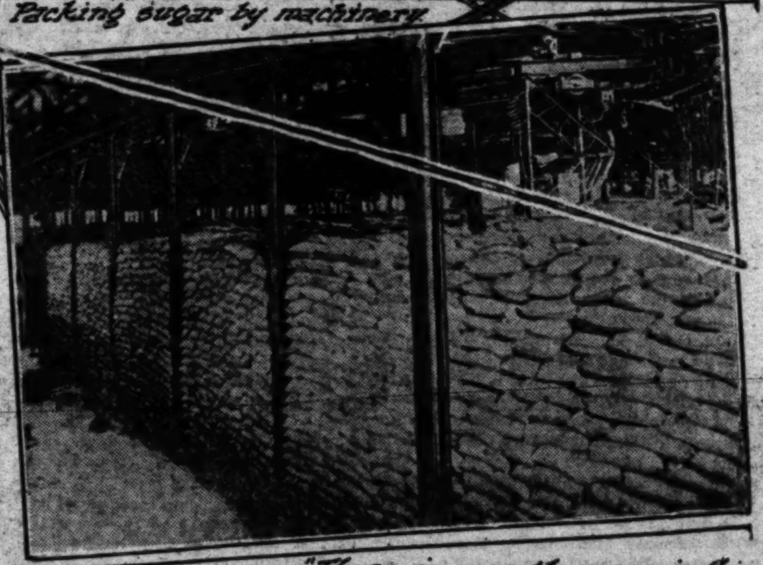
The largest sugar refinery in the world is located here at Chalmette. It stands on the Mississippi River, near New Orleans, and almost on the site where Gen. Andrew Jackson and his troop of backwoodsmen from Tennessee and Kentucky defeated three times as many British, under Gen. Pakenham, in the War of 1812. I saw three great steamers filled with raw sugar from Porto Rico and Cuba at anchor on almost the very spot where the British gunboats were stationed during that engagement, and from the roof of the refinery was shown where Jackson had thrown up his breastworks, behind which his soldiers lay and slaughtered the enemy.

The world's biggest sugar refinery. "A great sweet-meat castle on the banks of the Mississippi

The Telpher car "A gigantic cash carrier" whose load is a ton.



Packing sugar by machinery



"There is enough sugar in this room to give the whole United States a taffy-pulling."

The refinery is a mighty sweetmeat castle, made of brick, stone and steel, more impressive than any castle on the Rhine or the Danube. This castle rises to a height of fourteen stories above the muddy waters of the Mississippi. It is larger than any of the flour mills of Minneapolis, and its smokestacks are two-thirds as high as the Washington Monument. It has thirty acres of floor space, and these are filled with machinery that is now turning out enough sugar a year to give ten pounds to every man, woman and child in the United States and leave some to spare.

The factory belongs to the American Sugar Refining Company, and it is one of five operated by that institution. The others are located at Brooklyn, Jersey City, Boston and Philadelphia. They have altogether an output of something like 80,000 carloads of sugar and sirup per annum, and, placed end to end, their product would form a solid train of sugar filling a railroad track from New York to Cleveland. That train would contain almost one-third of the sugar used in the United States.

But before we go through the refinery let me give you a few facts about Uncle Sam's sugar factory and its importance to us in this critical stage of our history. Of all the sweet teeth in human jaws, Uncle Sam has the sweetest. We are now annually consuming more than eighty-six pounds of sugar per head, more than 430 pounds for every family in the United States, or more than a pound a day the whole year through. In this we are surpassed only by England and Denmark, which countries use a vast deal of sugar in manufactures of one kind or another. We consume more than twice as much sugar per capita as the French or the Austrians. We eat eight times as much as the Belgians, and more than four times as much as either the Spaniards or Turks. Last year our total consumption was about 4,000,000 tons—so much, that if it were loaded upon two-horse wagons the train of teams needed to haul it would reach around the world. It was more than one-fifth of all the sugar produced during that year.

Over three-fourths of that great mass of sugar came from countries outside the United States, and the bulk of it was from cane grown in Hawaii and the Philippines, and on the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico, which sources may be cut off by the war. If this is so, it is hard to say how high the price of sugar will go. As I write this it is 9 cents a pound, and at that it costs every household in our country on the average upward of 9 cents a day, year in and year out. The actual cost is about $39 a family per year.

Outside of the necessity of sugar for food, the by-products of the refineries are needed for making munitions. Alcohol is produced from molasses, and there is a plump little "war bride" on the other side of the Mississippi River, not far from where I am writing, that has grown fat off of the molasses alcohol she has already supplied during this war. Alcohol is needed to treat nitrated cotton in the manufacture of smokeless powder, and it is also used in making other explosives. From the consideration of these things it will be seen how important sugar is to our national welfare.

And now let me show you where our domestic sugar comes from. Here in Louisiana is a good place to learn. The State is largely dependent upon sugar, and it keeps track of the output in all parts of the United States and all over the world. Just now it is greatly increasing its area planted to cane. It produces almost all of the cane sugar of the United States, and it has something like 300,000 acres of this crop now in the ground. This area can be still further increased, and there are thousands of acres of land in Texas that could also be employed for the purpose. Indeed, cane is grown in nearly all of the Southern States from North Carolina and Arkansas southward, and from the Atlantic Coast to Arizona on the west. At present, Louisiana is growing almost the whole of the product, and of the cane sugar produced in our country in the last six years 97 per cent. of it has come from this State.

As to the beet sugar industry, it is comparatively recent as a national factor. It is about a quarter of a century since beets for sugar began to be successfully grown, but they now produce more than three times as much sugar as we get from our cane. In 1915 the product was about fifteen pounds for every man, woman and child in the country. The chief States that produce beet sugar in large quantities are California, Colorado, Michigan, Utah and Idaho, smaller amounts coming from Nebraska, Ohio and other States. The beet sugar area could undoubtedly be very greatly increased, and we can, if necessary, raise all the sugar we need by planting more beets.

I have seen the cane plantations of many parts of the world. There is no doubt that the crop can be grown more profitably in Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippine Islands. Sugar cane is a child of the tropics, and in this climate and soil it must have a protective tariff, or such conditions as have existed for the last year or so on account of the war, to make it pay well. The agricultural authorities are trying to get the planters to engage in diversified farming, but the movement in that direction has been retarded by the high prices of sugar, and a greater acreage has been put out this year than in the past.

Riding through Louisiana, you can see them everywhere cultivating the crop. Sugar cane, you know, belongs to the same family as Indian corn, and a canefield looks just like a cornfield until it begins to get ripe. The cane is planted in furrows, about seven feet apart, which run from one side of the

THE HUMAN BODY: ITS CARE, USE AND ABUSE.

Aids to Good Health. By C. F.

THIS is a long-distance interview with United States Senator B. R. Tillman of South Carolina.

Senator Tillman became a victim of paralysis.

The doctors gave him up to die.

The obituary notices of Senator Tillman were printed by mistake in several newspapers.

But Senator Tillman cured himself. He is still on deck; as spry—more spry—than ever. So I have considered his case important enough to present to the readers of The Times Illustrated Magazine and I have a personal letter from the Senator in which he gives his permission to present to the public this first long distance interview.

Senator Tillman cured himself of paralysis by means of diet, the very diet prescribed in these columns of the Magazine, coupled with deep breathing and the drinking of hot water.

It is not necessary to state anew and again the dietary laws and principles observed by the Senator to cure himself. The right human diet has been specified in these columns many times and most of our readers are familiar with them. It need only be stated here and now that from the right human diet are barred the following things:

Meats, salts, pepper, mustard, sharp condiments, alcohol and tobacco.

Senator Tillman says:

"I do think I know from experience that my regime of diet and other work as outlined have been of immense help to me and I do believe they would be helpful to all elderly persons similarly situated and I know the world would be much better off, or, rather, the people in it would be much better off, if they ate less, if they took more exercise in the open air and earned their bread by the sweat of their brow, rather than by the sweat of their brains."

Senator Tillman is a living example and witness of what can be done by means of the diet and by respect for the six rules for good health that appeared in my salutatory in this magazine. Senator Tillman has but one good eye and in the process of events he developed the malady of which he cured himself—a malady that most doctors seem to regard as incurable. The Senator decided to take matters into his own hands and out of the hands of the doctors. He quit smoking cigars. He resolved to stop drinking alcoholic liquors. He not only resolved, but he did stop smoking and he did stop drinking liquors of any sort. Then he barred meats and the condiments from his diet. He got better right away. He got so well that he could not stand the odor of tobacco and whisky in the United States Senate. He demanded and obtained the passage of a resolution to prevent the smoking of tobacco in executive sessions of the Senate. He got still better; so did the other Senators. Their health was improved by reflex action. Then Senator Tillman decided on a course of exercises that he programmed for himself. He continued to improve. He is a game cock yet. He is doing quite well and is more than able to be about. If you doubt this miracle write to Senator Tillman. He will tell you all about it.

For the benefit of persons who suffer and have suffered and may suffer like Senator Tillman is appended here his own description of physical culture exercises he has imposed on himself.

"The rules of health begin with seven exercises I take on my bed each morning. Here they are:

"Before getting up in the morning take the head off the pillow and stretch out straight. Draw in a deep breath and begin by kicking the buttock with the heel of one foot fifteen times; then exhale. Draw in the breath again and kick with the heel of the other foot fifteen times, holding the breath until the movement is finished. Then let the air out and draw in a fresh breath and kick with both feet fifteen times. Draw in a fresh breath to the limit after each movement.

"Next drop the heels on the bed with the knees drawn up. Then throw the knees as far apart as they can be carried, and repeat the movement twenty times.

"Then throw first one foot and then the other toward the head board with vigor, keeping the knee joints as straight as you can. A different set of muscles is brought into play by doing this with the knees drawn up and the knee joints limber.

"Now kick out with both feet as wide apart as possible, and kick with emphasis, as if you were kicking off a vicious dog.

"Next place the hands under the small of the back, using these as a lever. Elevate both feet at once and the lower part of the body toward the headboard, using the abdominal muscles to pull up the lower extremities. If in an iron bed, this movement can be facilitated by grasping the railing above the head with the hands, pulling up the legs and feet. This and the next movement are intended to reduce the paunch by changing the fat of the abdomen to muscle.

"Then fasten the feet under something and pull the trunk to a sitting posture. Repeat four or five times.

"Finally throw the head back, with the feet on the bed, and lift the body clear so that the shoulders do not touch, forming an arch. Repeat this as often as you wish.

"I practice these exercises morning and night, before and after dressing. I have found that deep breathing adds very much to my strength.

"Another great blessing to me has been hot water. I drink it as hot as I can, about 160 deg. Fahrenheit in my case, using at least three quarts a day. Tepid water is rejected by some stomachs, as it produces nausea.

"But hot water becomes acceptable to most persons. I have gotton so I do not want any other kind. It cleanses the stomach in readiness for food. It aids digestion, taken at the right time, shortly after eating. It is a specific for indigestion, acute or otherwise. Indeed I cannot say too much for it."

Father Kneipp recommends to cure and ward off paralysis and apoplexy the packs described in these columns in the article on the subject of infantile paralysis. The judgment of the best thinkers on the subject is that these maladies are not so much due to previous diseases suffered and overcome as they are to the powerful drugs licensed medicine prescribes in an effort to aid nature. It is another case of metastasis, in which the cure is worse than the original disease. All the serious major maladies that licensed medicine tries in vain to cure with powerful drugs of the arsenic order yield readily to the packs recommended by Father Kneipp and to diet and exercise and hot water as recommended by Senator Tillman. The after effects of most diseases are, as a matter of fact, the after effects of the powerful drugs licensed medicine uses in all too large quantities to cure the maladies. By means of the packs that enable the patient to sweat the poison from his body; by means of the diet herein and hereinbefore prescribed and by means of rational exercise and deep breathing all the so-called incurable diseases yield readily and forever to treatment. Diseases called incurable by licensed medicine are incurable only by means of drugs. Fortunately, there are other ways to cure maladies, as Senator Tillman and Father Kneipp and Col. Spohr have recommended. All victims of the "incurable" are hereby urged to try these treatments. They can do absolutely no harm. They will do a world of good. Improvement will be instantaneous. And the cure will be a permanent cure. There will be no after effects if the patient, once cured, co-operates to keep himself well by means of diet and exercise and clean living.

Flour Mills at Home.

Quite a number of readers of this department of The Times Magazine have written in for details of the mill I have at home to grind wheat into flour which my wife bakes into bread. So I shall say more about this mill, which is truly a wonder. The mill is made in Philadelphia, Pa., and it costs only $4.75. I have saved hundreds of dollars by this mill. We buy the wheat by the hundredweight of the farmers or the grocers and I grind the wheat into flour. I put the wheat through twice. First to break the grains; second to reduce it into a coarse flour. Then my wife makes the bread the same day I grind the flour. The grinding is great sport. It is work and exercise combined. It is a joy and a delight to grind these magnificent yellow grains from the Lord's blessed fields into wondrous flour.

As a rule most persons do not care much for bread and eat little of it with meals. This is because they never got bread and do not know what real bread is. All guests at our house fairly gorge themselves on my wife's bread. It is better than cake. It is the real staff of life. They all exclaim in one voice:

"What wonderful bread. I never tasted anything like it."

It is a delight to hear them say it. It is a joy to see them eat it. And they enjoy the eating of it because it is absolutely pure food that makes for good nature and health.

When I say that bread is the main article of every meal I mean whole wheat bread, or any of the cereals. I employ the word bread as the generic name for all the cereals. If you do not eat the grain in the form of bread eat it in the form of gruel, or in soups and puddings. There are a thousand and one ways of preparing grains and vegetables that you have never heard of. I am going to give you the recipes later. It cost me hundreds of dollars to get them, but I shall give them to you for nothing; because I want you all to feel well and be well and live long and joyously.

I am amazed that our hardware merchants and other merchants have not the business acumen to stock up on these kitchen flour mills that you attach to the table and actuate by hand or with an electric motor. I hunted all over town for one in Los Angeles before I found the place—an out of the way corner of town where a man had sense enough to have these mills on sale. The interest in the subject is attested by the many inquiries I have received about these flour mills which are much in vogue in France where the wives bake bread of flour ground on the same day. I was bent on sending to Paris for one before I learned that actually I could get one here in Los Angeles. I earnestly recommend to our hardware merchants and to our department stores to display these mills and advertise them in The Times. I earnestly recommend to our grocers to stock up on whole cereals and advertise to the people that they have the grain to go with these mills. Otherwise I shall be constrained to repeat what George Bernard Shaw has said:

"Our business men know nothing about business."

What amazes me more than anything else is that our millers have not the business acumen to put whole wheat flour on the market; flour made from nothing but the whole grain of wheat—not white flour mixed with bran. If I were a miller I would snatch at the opportunity. I would get this proper flour before the people. And I could charge twice as much for it as the millers get for their white flour, because whole wheat flour is twenty times better than white flour. And I would make it an honest whole wheat flour and give my bond for it that it is whole wheat flour. The people will come to a miller like that. As Thoreau well says, make a rat trap better than anyone else and the people will beat a track through the forest to buy rat traps of you. Give the people whole wheat flour. They certainly want it. They cry to me for it. And I might add—looking at their pale and anaemic faces they certainly need whole wheat flour. Let the hogs die of atrophy; but give the people pure food and whole food and wholesome food.

Glanders.

Glanders in horses or man is a curable disease. I shall later along relate the history of glanders cases in horses cured absolutely by an army officer who himself contracted the malady from the horses and then in turn cured himself. His remedy has been premiated by the War Department of Germany.

Are You Suffering from Painful Afflictions of the Feet. Broken-down Arches, Callouses, Bunions, Etc.?

Call on us for relief.

There are numerous Arch Supporters put on the market to correct flat feet that are made over a form, and in some cases answer the purpose. There is no ready-made Arch Support manufactured in this way that will give the desired results in more than 10 per cent. of the cases. The reason is that there are different ligaments in the foot that may be affected and thus cause pain in the various joints. Our Arch Supports are made by perfect measurements and are guaranteed to relieve every case.

HOW TRICK PLAYS ARE PRODUCED

Fooling the Audience. By Mary B. Mullett.

IF THERE is one thing that managers and stage directors dread it is the trick play, the play containing stage effects which depend on some more or less complicated mechanical contrivance.

These productions not only require extra stage hands to work the necessary mechanism, and that means additional expense, but, what is more important, there is always a chance that somebody will make a mistake or the machinery won't work and a perfectly good trick will go wrong.

The audience, on the contrary, likes it. People enjoy being puzzled by a stage effect they cannot explain. Long after they have forgotten what the actors said and the actresses wore—or didn't wear—they will remember some trick effect and wonder how it was done.

One of the best examples was the shattering of the vase of flowers in "Within the Law." Everybody that saw the play remembers that incident, no matter what else is forgotten. And everybody has tried to figure out how it was done.

The base was supposed to be broken by a bullet from a soundless pistol. It is a dramatic moment when the pistol is simply pointed at the vase and the glass breaks into a hundred pieces. But what a fiasco it would have been if the pistol had been pointed and the glass didn't break.

The first scheme tried was to have the vase on a table against the canvas wall of the room. An opening was provided in this canvas and a stage hand was to strike the vase through this opening with an iron hammer. But that was no trick. Everybody could explain that. And furthermore the vase did not break as it should.

It would be ridiculous to have a man fire at it from the front and then have it knocked over from the back. Instead of the pieces falling away from the shot they would fall toward it. One needn't be a mechanical expert to see that this was absurd.

A Concealed Hammer.

No! the vase must stand out in the middle of the room so that there could be no appearance of its being touched. It was placed on an ordinary center table which was quite often open underneath. But an electric wire was run up one of the legs and connected with a hammer concealed among the flowers in the vase. At the right moment a button was pressed off the stage, the thin glass vase was struck by this hammer and fell to pieces.

It just happens that Bayard Veiller, who introduced this soundless gun episode, is responsible for the best tricks that have been shown on the New York stage this season. In "The 13th Chair" there are four incidents which have puzzled the thousands who have seen the play. They are the episodes of the table, the door, the window shade and the knife.

In the first act Margaret Wycherly as Rosalie la Grange places her finger tips on a table and apparently lifts it by the exercise of some spiritualistic power. It seems as if it would be an easy thing to manage this table lifting, but it wasn't so simple as it sounds.

Various schemes were tried and abandoned. First, a wire was stretched tightly across the top of the table and Miss Wycherly slipped her fingers under this. But when the table was raised the wire curved upward and became plainly visible.

Then they tried putting a ring on a finger of each hand. The under side of these rings was supposed to catch the tops of tacks driven into the table. But this required some care in adjustment and the effort was apparent to anybody watching with the concentrated interest with which the audience observes the proceedings, so that method was abandoned.

Then they bored holes in the table top and Miss Wycherly put her fingers through them. That was still more unsatisfactory. Any one could see that her finger tips did not rest on the table as they were supposed to. People in the front rows might even have seen those finger tips underneath the top, and that would have been worse than no trick at all.

The Tricks of Mediums.

Alleged mediums often manage this trick by means of a hook attached to a belt around the waist and concealed by the front of the dress. But Miss Wycherly didn't like this arrangement and it is not an easy one for an amateur either. So that, too, was put in the discard.

Mr. Veiller is so proud of the way in which the problem was finally solved that he says it is the one trick he will not explain. You may watch it as keenly as you like. He doesn't think you can find out how it is done.

The business of the knife is very interesting. It is the weapon with which the murder is committed in the first act. The whole subsequent mystery depends on its disappearance. Every member of the company is searched in vain. The room is examined carefully. But no trace of the weapon is found.

Finally Rosalie la Grange, left alone in the room, raises the window shade and a shaft of light from a street lamp shines up onto the ceiling and she sees the missing knife embedded there, hilt downward. The murderer, who is an expert in throwing knives, is supposed to have sent it flying up into the ceiling before the lights are turned up after the murder.

Rosalie la Grange summons the detectives and the rest of the company, but does not show them the knife. At the psychological moment it falls and sticks upright in a table. A very effective performance on the part of the knife, but the problem was how to make it do it.

You cannot sit anywhere in the audience without hearing the people around you speculating as to how it is accomplished. The commonest explanation is that the knife is weighted so that it will turn over as it drops. Well, this really was the first method attempted. But it was found that a fall of twenty-four feet was necessary to make it turn.

A room that would be twenty-seven feet from floor to ceiling, allowing for the additional three-foot height of the table, was too abnormal even for a stage setting. So some other solution had to be found. Countless experiments finally resulted in the use of two knives. One goes up through the ceiling as the second comes down point foremost.

At a certain point a catch is automatically released and the weapon drops. In all the weeks and months that the play has been running there has never been a failure of this mechanism. But every one, from the actors to the stage hands, has a moment of anxiety until the knife stands quivering in the table.

Several persons have raised the objection that it is absurd to have the knife drop at precisely that moment without anything to cause it to do so except the wish of the author. One man proposed something that would make it seem more reasonable. He argued that as the scene was laid in New York, where subway blasts are daily and hourly incidents, these could be made to account for it.

A Made-up Subway Explosion.

The noise of a subway explosion in the first act could be commented upon; also the manner in which it jarred the furniture. A second explosion a little later would still further prepare the way. And finally a third one would account for the knife dropping from the ceiling. But Mr. Veiller couldn't see it that way. The door episode looks simple, but they literally sat up nights working it out. The door must open slowly and spookily without being touched. If it opened outward that would be easy; but it would have no effect. Anybody would know that a stage hand behind the scenes could do that. To produce the proper sensation it must open inward, so that the audience can see both sides of it. Just try the trick for yourself and see what you can make of it.

At first they experimented with a spring. But when it was released the door flew open with a jerk. No well behaved spirit ever opens a door that way. It must move stealthily and creepily. And it certainly does, thanks to a simple little iron attachment at the bottom of the door which is worked by a man quite out of range of even the sharpest eyes in the audience.

The window shade trick is really simple. It is released by a man behind the scenes. But every one of these tricks depends on the watchfulness and promptness of a stage hand, who must be looking out for his cue as carefully as the most important actor. And in this particular play, where one set of scenery has done duty for months without having to be changed, these four tricks have required the services of stage hands who otherwise would have been totally unnecessary.

So they have been an item of considerable expense. The night before the play opened these tricks were rehearsed from 8 in the evening until after 5 the next morning to make sure of their working perfectly.

There is an effect in the last act of "Out There" which isn't a mechanical trick but took some planning to achieve. It accompanies the speech which Laurette Taylor as 'Aunted Annie makes in Trafalgar Square. She is supposed to be standing on something above the level of the crowd around her, and to get this effect the audience must see only the heads and shoulders of these men.

The Kneeling Supers.

The spectators probably think the men are on a lowered stage. But that would involve changing the flooring, a matter of both trouble and expense. So the supers who make up the crowd simply kneel on the stage back of a black cloth which hides all but the upper part of their bodies.

The effect gained has been all that could be desired except on a single occasion when one of the kneeling supers got such an intolerable crick in his knees that he suddenly rose to his full height. It may be superfluous to state that his popularity with the management did not rise when he did.

Do you remember the scene in "Canary Cottage" where Trixie Friganza plays a regular anvil chorus on a stove loaded with saucepans? A pleasing but inexplicable incident in this performance is that the lid of one of these saucepans flies off with a pop without apparently being assisted by human agency.

This is one of the tricks which originated in the fertile brain of Oliver Morosco. And it is a very ingenious one. To accomplish it a small revolver is loaded with a blank cartridge and fastened inside the pan with the muzzle close to the side of the receptacle. A wire which passes to the outside is attached to the trigger. When the ebullient Trixie pulls this wire the pistol goes off and the concussion of air blows off the lid of the pan. If that isn't a good trick perhaps you can show a better one to managers from Missouri.

There is another one in "Canary Cottage" that has raised no end of speculation. Everybody gasps with amazement at the red eyes of the little green devils haunting bibulous Billy Moss. They gleam like red fire, these wonderful eyes. And everybody echoes the sentiment, if not the precise words, of a man who exclaimed to his companion:

"Gosh! do you see red fire in those little fellows' eyes or am I drunk too?"

The simple explanation of the phenomenon is that shiny red paper is pasted on the eyelids of the two little midgets. It is when their eyes are shut that the red fire appears. The illusion is perfect. When they blink their eyes rapidly, as they do when they have to see their way about, the effect is startling.

The Winter Garden Effects.

The Winter Garden is famous for original and surprising effects and the new show has one that will add to this reputation. The scene is that of a football game in the Yale bowl. The players occupy the front of the stage. Back of them is the great sweep of the stadium; tiers and tiers of faces rising in a solid human wall. As the game proceeds whole sections of these spectators rise with wild cheers and waving of pennants.

It is a wonderful effect and one that causes endless comment. Your amazement will be greater if you know how it is achieved. A wooden framework measuring about sixty by forty feet is let down to form the back of the stage. In this framework are hundreds of rows of little wooden figures, 35,000 of them altogether. On each one of these figures is pasted a slip of white paper only about half an inch in length. The slips are attached only at the lower edge, leaving the rest of each slip loose.

The 35,000 spectators are in sections, just as they are in the real bowl. They are divided by lines representing aisles. When the stage hands pull certain ropes all the rows of little figures in one section appear to jump up and wave their flags. This is done by having the rows work like shutters which rise when the ropes are pulled and drop back when they are released.

When the figures in a section are raised a current of air is directed at that section and all the tiny slips of paper are set quivering. At the same time colored light is thrown on them, red for Harvard and blue for Yale, while the cheers are supplied off stage. The illusion of a mass of people wildly waving flags is perfect.

In the "Show of Wonders" this season the Winter Garden made another ten strike in stage tricks when it showed a whole troop of cavalry galloping down a slope straight toward the audience. It was so thrilling and apparently so menacing that spectators fairly shrank back in their seats. Yet not one of those mounted figures was really moving, except up and down.

The first half dozen ranks were made up of real men mounted on dummy horses. The rear rows were painted wooden figures. The illusion of an advancing charge was accomplished by simply having these rows move up and down alternately. One row jumped up; then as it settled down the other one behind it jumped up. The effect was as if the whole troop was galloping rhythmically forward.

"Peter Ibbetson" is full of the mechanical difficulties which turn a stage manager's hair gray. The first two nights of the play it seemed as if everything, animate and inanimate that possibly could go wrong seized the opportunity. The result was a mad orgy of mishaps. It was supposed to be a dream play. It was more like a nightmare.

But things have been licked into shape now and the behavior of the intricate stage machinery is as seraphic as—well, as John Barrymore unexpectedly looks. A good example of the difficulties of the production is a certain dream scene where in only six or seven seconds the whole stage setting changes.

Peter Ibbetson's Dream.

Barrymore, as Peter Ibbetson, lies down on his cot in the prison cell and arranges himself in the prescribed attitude for "dreaming true." As he is supposed to go to sleep the lights are slowly turned down. The prison cell setting occupies only the front part of the stage. Back of it the scenery of a garden is already in place.

The instant the stage is dark enough Peter leaps from his cot and his place is taken by another man who simply lies there during the ensuing scene. Peter ducks under the drop representing the back of his cell as that drop is being quickly raised. Also he scrambles under a scrim drop immediately back of the prison wall drop and rushes out through the garden gate. He has only a few seconds in which to do this.

The lights came on immediately and Peter, with the Duchess of Towers, walks into the garden through the gateway. The effect of the unreality of dreams is gained by the scrim drop between the garden and the audience. With the lights on behind it this scrim is not visible to those in front. It merely veils with a sort of tender softness the scene back of it.

Every one in the audiences that have gone to see and to laugh at "Nothing but the Truth" remembers the clock in the second and third acts. That clock is a mighty important member of Mr. Collier's company.

It is a real timepiece; no fake about it. But if you will take out your watch in the third act and keep tab on the two you will discover that the clock can beat you every time. It goes forty-five minutes while your watch goes only thirty-five; or perhaps forty.

You and your fellow auditors are responsible for this. If you could be counted on to laugh just so often and just so long, the clock could be left to its own devices. But the trouble is that a Saturday night crowd may laugh more than the one on Monday night does. Or some hysterical Wednesday matinee woman may delay the stage action for a minute or two.

You never can tell within five minutes, or even more, just how much time will be used up. The scene is supposed to begin at 3:25 in the afternoon. But the whole point of the play would be spoiled if the clock chimed 4 too soon.

Stage Manager and the Clock.

So, if you will hold your watch on that scene you will find that there is an unaccounted discrepancy. It may take thirty-five minutes and it may take more. But no matter how long it takes the hands of the clock will travel exactly from 3:15 to 4 and never fail to arrive there at the exact second necessary.

To accomplish this no less a personage than the stage manager himself spends every moment of that time behind the clock. The big brass pendulum which is visible to the audience, swings regularly. It never varies its motion. But the stage manager

"HOME, SWEET HOME." BY A HOUSEKEEPER.

For Wife, Mother, Daughter and Maid.

More About Cooking Contest.

In the Cooking Contest just beginning too much cannot be said on the question of economy. It is a subject of such vital importance now, something not only to be talked about but practiced everywhere.

In getting up the recipes state the price of everything and estimate the entire cost including fuel. State how much it will cost to prepare the dish for a certain number of persons, or the cost per person. For instance, one pound of asparagus, costing 7 cents, will take 5 cents worth of gas to cook it and 3 cents worth of butter to dress it, making an entire cost of 15 cents for a dish for two persons, or 7 cents per person. That is merely an example of an "extra" side dish. Some dishes have in them ingredients and sufficient nourishment for a whole meal. Many soups come under this head and these will be much in favor. To concoct a delicious piece of cookery that meets all the requirements of both palate and pocketbook is indeed an accomplishment, and one that we feel is possessed by many readers of The Illustrated Magazine.

Soup recipes will be received and judged during the week of June 3. Following that, during the week beginning June 10, fish will be the subject treated. With the abundance and variety of fish to be obtained here this should be a banner week in the cooking line.

All recipes should be in as early in the week as possible and don't forget to state the cost of each and every ingredient. Some one is going to have $5 at the end of this week for a soup recipe that will tell how to feed the largest family for the least expense.

Mail all recipes to Contest Editor, Illustrated Weekly, The Times.

ABOUT YOUR MAID.

First Thing to Show Her.

[Correspondents Buffalo News:] Every time I have a new maid, even if for a day, one of the first things I show her is where the fire-extinguishers hang on each floor—they are the cylindrical sort—and I teach her how to use them. Even if the maids never have occasion to use their knowledge for me, they may be able to give help to some one else in trouble. Most of them speak of having noticed similar fire-extinguishers in other housees, but have never before been shown how to use them.

Tell Her This:

"If you let yourself go with the swing of a job, your mind can't be worrying about the job you have to do next. It is just free for the labor at hand.

"The woman who, as she kneads bread, stiffens her muscles unnecessarily for the task, sighs at her work, or wears a brow furrowed with anxious thought, is not in the swing of bread making, and her nervous system is going to pay for her not being so. While if she lets her whole body move easily to the work and keeps her mind clear for it she will accomplish the task without weariness."

IN THE DINING-ROOM.

Simplicity Keynote.

[Good Housekeeping:] The fewer the dining-room ornaments of any kind the better. A single suitable picture is the more impressive when it is the only one on the walls. There is also great decorative value in pairs of things; a pair of console-tables, a pair of well-balanced mirrors, a pair of porcelain jars on the mantel-shelf, or flower bowls or candelabra on the sideboard, or a pair of jardinieres with plants flanking a doorway or group of windows; a pair of anything suitable is particularly good in this room because it emphasizes the symmetry which is one of its chief charms.

The Oriental Rug.

With the floor it is much the same as with walls, for it is also a part of your background, and in the choice of a quiet neutral covering you can never go wrong. None can dispute the distinction given by a fine Oriental rug if chosen with regard for the color scheme and character of the room. We may safely use in the dining-room many a rug with a medallion center which would be tiresome elsewhere, since the table covers the center of the floor. The fascinating Chinese rugs, with their Oriental symbolism and picturesque designs, are deservedly popular with decorators for dining-room use because we do not grow weary here of a pattern that would easily prove monotonous in any other room where we could so soon learn its detail.

INDOOR FOLIAGE.

The Palm as House Plant.

[Ladies' World:] No plant is more effective and decorative than a healthy, well-grown palm, but often it is neither healthy nor well-grown, and the result is a dismal failure. The trouble is usually with the drainage. Allow at least one to one and a half inches for drainage in the bottom of a pot. This may be accomplished by placing a piece of broken pottery in the pot, concave side down, directly over the hole. Over this put an inch or so of broken crockery and then a layer of sphagnum-moss. The palm, although it flourishes in a moderately rich soil, does not like to be overfed. A spoonful of bone-meal mixed with the top soil once every few months will be sufficient fertilizer. It grows slowly, having on an average only three or four new leaves a year. Palms need plenty of light and air, but little or no sunshine. Shower the foliage several times a week to keep away insects. If, in spite of this, scale, mealy bug, or aphis attack your palm, apply lemon oil.

Large Pots not Necessary.

It is not true that palms need large pots. On the contrary, their root room should be restricted. If it is necessary to repot the plants, use a deep pot, one size larger than the former. May or June is the best time for repotting. One reason for failure in palm culture at home is due to the fact that out of the one thousand known species of palms, only four or five varieties can be successfully grown in the house. The two most desirable of these are the kentia belmoreana and kentia forsteriana. Another good variety is the latania borbonica or fan palm. The areca lutescens is like the kentia, but more delicate and not so easy to grow. Another very graceful palm is the cocos weddelliana, a dwarf variety. Avoid sudden changes of temperature in caring for palms.

SONG OF THE SHOES.

[New York Evening Telegram:] For nails in shoes, cut an insole of thin pasteboard, as the side of a cracker box. The nails will not hurt the feet, and the pasteboard lasts a long time.

To keep on pumps sew a piece of chamois to the lining inside the heel.

When the soles of shoes and slippers begin to wear cut a piece of kid from the top of an old shoe and glue it over the worn sole.

To restore the color to black kid mix ink with the white of an egg and apply with a soft sponge.

To clean white kid dip a clean white flannel cloth in a little ammonia and rub lightly on a cake of white soap. Rub the soiled spots gently, changing the cloth as soon as it becomes soiled.

To polish tan shoes wash the shoes clean with a sponge and warm water. Wipe with a dry cloth and let dry. Then rub freely with the inside of a banana peel. Wipe carefully with a dry cloth and polish with cotton.

LAUNDRY HELPS.

Enamel Tub Lids.

[St. Louis Globe-Democrat:] Porcelain or enameled iron laundry tubs are now carefully fitted with well-made, durable enameled covers. Such tubs, in either laundry or kitchen, are not in any way unsightly, and when not in use serve perfectly as a table. These covers are a big improvement on the old-time wood and even metal ones, as they do not warp and need no cover.

Good Ironing Board Cover.

The best kind of ironing board cover is made of a heavy layer of absorbent cotton, such as is used for comforters. It should be cut to fit the board and tied, the knots being left on the wrong side.

TO OVERCOME THINNESS.

Malt and Cod Liver Oil.

[Lina Cavalieri, in New York American:] Malt and cod liver oil are admirable fat producers. There are on the market one or two honest preparations of malt and cod liver oil which are not unpleasant to take. A tablespoonful in a glass of milk makes a valuable drink.

You should arrange to weigh yourself every day. If possible get a bathroom scale and always weigh in the morning as soon as you get out of bed. Whatever you weigh at night you will weigh from one and a half or two pounds less in the morning. If not convenient to weigh without your clothes on then be sure you weigh always with the same clothes.

Milk Before Retiring.

You may still take a little more nourishment before you go to bed. Try drinking two glasses of milk—always sip milk slowly, taking five minutes for each glassful. Better yet, break and beat two raw eggs into the milk before you drink it. If you can get sweet cream, drink cream every day. Half a glass of cream is a rather rich drink, but it can be made easy to digest by diluting it with seltzer.

THE BATH ROOM.

Best Floor Covering.

[Woman's Home Companion:] The bathroom floor, requiring frequent wiping or washing, must, of course, be of some thoroughly sanitary, easily cleaned and durable material.

For the new bathroom, the first choice, without a doubt, is a white vitrified tiling. While the cost of this floor averages 60 cents per square foot, laid, it is worth possessing, even at some sacrifice in other directions, as it offers all that is best for its purposes.

Glazed Tile Cove Basing.

With a glazed tile cove basing, at 75 cents per linear foot, your bathroom floor would be absolutely sanitary, very easy to clean, and practically indestructible. For a room nine feet by six feet, such a floor would cost approximately $44. Where this figure is prohibitive, a well-laid composition floor, at 25 cents per square foot, might be substituted. This composition flooring, in sanitary features, compares very favorably with tile. The material must be of good quality, the floor level properly prepared for it, and the whole carefully laid, or it may cause trouble by cracking.

MAKING OVER GARMENTS.

Dye When Good Material Fades.

[St. Paul Pioneer Press:] Very often with a garment left over from one season to another you will find that, though the material is perfectly good it is faded. This need not discourage you, for a trip to the dye pot will remedy this fault. Black dresses that are not worn, but are faded (for black fades into a dusty, disagreeable gray during a season of wear) will look like new after they have been dipped in dye. When dyeing a dress if you have bought any material to add to it when making it over put in the new pieces as well as the old so that they will all be of the same shade. Remember that any color will take black.

Sometimes Turning Will Suffice.

Perhaps you will find that your dress, while faded on one side, has retained all its freshness on the other. If the weave is such that the reverse side may be used all that will be necessary will be to turn the goods and make up with the fresh side out.

Some goods, such as cashmere and soft silks, may be put in the tub and washed in the usual way, being careful, of course, to dust thoroughly first. They should be ironed on the wrong side before they are dry with a warm, not hot, iron and pressed until perfectly dry.

To Be and Not to Have.

[Woman's Home Companion:] "Etre et pas avoir," is a French maxim for the pursuit of the perfect life. "Be—never mind about having," is what it tries to say. For that is what the poor, suffering, struggling, blinded world of human life needs more than possessions—just faith in its betterment; just tenderness toward its incapacities, just love for its possibilities. A happy, valiant, kindly nature is a greater gift than riches, and it is possible of acquisition where wealth is often out of the question.

DOMESTIC PREPAREDNESS.

To Serve Breakfast Quickly.

[Dallas News:] Breakfast matters can be well outlined the evening before. The table should be set, potatoes sliced and put on the ice if one is going to have fried or creamed potatoes for breakfast, and chops or other meat on the ice ready for use. Oatmeal, if it is to be served, should be partly prepared the evening before, and the woman who has no gas stove for cooking should get an oil stove, if only a tiny affair with a couple of burners, as it will do quicker work in the "rush hour" than either a coal or wood fire.

Comfort and Facility.

Young people who work—in fact, any person who works—should have a good, nourishing breakfast, and the wife or mother should see to it that they have such a meal before they leave the house. We are, indeed, all human. We oversleep, we mislay things and we forget to order things, and as a result pay the penalties attached to all these slips, but the busy girl who anticipates her morning needs the evening before, the mother who arranges tomorrow's breakfast requirements tonight, will make that meal most satisfying for herself and all concerned.

"PRACTICE what you preach." "What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." "Take your own medicine."

These are wise old saws. Beloved, they are worked out in human experience through long ages and are crystallized in these proverbial forms. Never despise a proverb, friends. It is the concentrated wisdom founded on experience, sometimes going back through countless ages.

It is very easy to enunciate this philosophy, but mighty hard to follow it. "Practice what you preach." It is essential that every preacher should live according to his preachments. If he does not, he is like a cowardly general in the army who says, "Go in, boys, go on and win." Such an order never did win a battle, and such a general never was victorious. The victorious leader always says, "Come on, boys, follow me, and we'll lick thunder out of the enemy." That's the fellow who wins battles.

But many an ungracious pastor there is in the world who as that lovely girl Ophelia remarks, "The primrose path of dalliance treads, and recks not his own rede." That means, he says one thing and does another; does not practice what he preaches. The world is full of preachers lay and clerical, and could well dispense with a great many of them. What the world wants is practicers, people who do the right thing, and one good example is worth more than all the sermons a man could utter in a lifetime.

"What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." This is a bit of wisdom particularly lacking in our days. It is lacking in the highest circles in the country, and woe betide the people who try to make one sauce for the goose and another for the gander. The other day at Washington a committee of excellent men met to teach the world how to conserve food products in order to win the war. It is agreed on all hands that there is a great shortage of food in the world, and every one knows that a hungry man has no fight in him. Who in modern times has known better what an army needs than Napoleon I? He pinned his faith very largely on the commissary department, for he knew, as he said, that every "army marches on its stomach."

This committee of excellent men who met at Washington told the rest of us to practice economy and even self-denial in order that the rations of food may go around and every one get his share. They emphasized that it would be particularly necessary for the armies in Europe to be well fed in order to defeat the enemy and win the war. They were very wise men, with mountains of statistics at their fingers' ends showing exactly what foodstuff was shortest, where economy was most necessary. They said economy was necessary in every branch of food and should be practiced in every family in the land.

You know the Spartans used to say that black broth served at public dinners was naturally unpalatable to strangers because strangers did not have the Spartan sauce to eat with the black broth. An Athenian or a Corinthian visiting Sparta, when he complained of the unpalatable dinner served him, was told about the proper sauce to have with it, and asked what it was. And his neighbor who was coaching him replied, "Hunger." This committee at Washington rubbed it into us all that we should be sparing in our use of food. They may have had this Spartan story before their eyes.

But while they told the rest of us that hunger would make an excellent sauce, making every food palatable, they had a different sauce for the ganders in the committee than that which they prescribed for the geese in the country generally. They were not practicing what they preached; not a bit of it. While they were preaching self-denial and economy to the rest of us they were treading the primrose path of dalliance with a vengeance, according to the report of the dinner they sat down to. Nothing was lacking at that feast. It was more like a Belshazzar banquet than a Spartan dinner. From the appetizer, through the soup, through the fish, on up to the entrees, hors-d'oeuvres, piece de resistance, and on through the pudding or pie, the dinner was an awful waste of food that must have taxed the digestion of every preacher of economy at the table.

There was one sauce for the rich man and another for the poor one, according to the philosophy of these statesmen bent on making the rest of us win the war by fasting and abstinence, by economy and self-denial. They prescribed to their brother Americans a plentiful supply of Spartan sauce with their repasts while they themselves indulged in sauces that would tickle the palate of a Lucullus. A lady speaking of this feast held by this committee at Washington in the hearing of the Eagle the other day remarked that probably $25 could have been saved from that banquet held by these preachers who were not practicing their own preachment, who were far from taking their own medicine. The lady went on to say that there was wasted at that feast enough to have fed fifty families a whole day. The Eagle thinks she was very mild and moderate in her estimate of the waste.

Now these people were not sinners beyond all the men in Washington. The event was not unusual. They were following the usual way of men in their position, just doing the ordinary thing. It would not make a good story for a sensational newspaper. They were doing what thousands of social workers all over the country are doing every day. This is why social work fails so much. It is like everything else—the preacher must follow his own preachment, the doctor must take his own medicine, the poor goose must have the same sauce as the rich gander, or the poor gander must have a plentiful supply of Spartan sauce as well as the rich goose who tries to lead him in the right paths.

In the slums in every city appear from time to time ladies decked out in silks and satins, with laces and jewelry hung all over them, making them an epitome of a walking department store. With grand airs they step out of their big limousines into the hovel of some poor wretch, begin to talk economies, self-denials, and other wisdom. With the tips of their gloved fingers they scarcely touch the grimy hands of the poor toiler to whom they appear with their so-called uplift philosophy. It is just a fad with the social visitor. She does it just because her neighbor is doing it, for fashion is the passion that rules the female heart in her visit to the slums as well as in the bonnet she wears. There is a world between the two women who meet on this attempted level which never can bring the one down to the other or lift the other up to the one.

It is very difficult to practice what one preaches, to make the sauce for the other fellow's goose serve for our own gander, or for any doctor to take his own pill. It is like a physician who administers to himself a carefully sugar-coated remedy while he administers to the palate of his patient a dose of raw quinine. Of course one can swallow raw quinine if it is necessary and he has the nerve, but here is where the world goes awry, in giving one man the raw quinine and his neighbor a carefully sugar-coated pill which does the same work and avoids all the suffering of taking the bitter dose.

The world will never be better, or will grow better very slowly, until we all learn the wisdom of the philosophy of these three wise saws quoted above. When every preacher practices what he preaches, when every social worker and reformer will learn to take the sauce with his goose that he serves with the other fellow's gander, when every physician heals himself by taking his own medicine, when every general in the army says, "Come on, boys," then victory will perch on the banners of every battle for righteousness fought out among humanity. Then and not until then will reformers accomplish what they pretend to be aiming at. Then and not till then will sermons be effective, showing themselves in the lives of the congregations. Then will moral health become the rule among you humans, and "sorrow and sighing will flee away." When the social worker will meet the poor, hard-working woman on her own level, go to her house dressed plainly, speak to her in terms of sympathy and not of superior wisdom, and not till then will social work amount to anything.

Yours for the great world-democracy,

The Eagle
HIS MARK

THE LANCER

I DON'T think perhaps we ought to be allowed to see our candidates for the Board of Education. And I feel quite sure we should not be allowed to hear them. Education is such a wonderful word; it conjures up such a wealth of knowledge, of understanding, of wisdom, of rectitude. And a Board of Education, the directors of the great work, ought to be such a glorious company of superlative highbrows, with lofty foreheads, eyes gleaming with intelligence, fine chins and all that sort of thing.

I looked at and listened to five of the candidates last week—three male and two female. I am quite sure I did not see them on their best day. One gentleman had no better reason to offer for his re-election than that he had attended 178 out of 179 of the meetings during the last year. After all, the office furniture did that much. Another gentleman admitted that he did not know a blessed thing about it, but insisted upon his willingness to learn. Which did rather impress one with the idea that he should go to school rather than to the Board of Education. It seemed such an extravagant little luxury to pay the gentleman while he was learning. Couldn't he be persuaded to pay the city for the privilege instead?

The ladies seemed nice worthy souls. One of them would certainly make a most capable chairman of a civic center. Or vice-president of a suburban club. But it was difficult to imagine her dispensing vast wisdom and Solomonic decisions on the education system of a big city. The other one gave more signs of intelligence and experience. But not enough to wax violently enthusiastic about.

And none of them looked quite well. Seemed to be suffering from a lurking headache or a little stomach trouble. One or two of them may have been dashing young fellows twenty years ago. Oh, they probably were. But there was a rheumaticy, lumbagoish, gouty look about at least two of the male specimens.

However, they are all perfectly sure they are the ideal persons for the job. If we had never been allowed to see them we should probably have thought so too. As it is, we must confess to a sense of depression.

My Mission.

My correspondents seem to think that my mission in life is to defend the ineptitudes, take up the cudgels on behalf of the incompetent, solve everybody's little problems, journalistically jump on anybody they don't happen to like, and write masterpieces about their Red Cross teas.

During the last few days I have been invited to wax emotional about a strange lady's divorce troubles and blaspheme her vanishing husband in print; to use my influence to get an incompetent maiden lady a highly paid position because she happens to be a friend of a friend of mine; to tell an eastern family which Los Angeles real estate firm they can safely put their whole sweet trust in; to attack the professor of a school on the word of a disgruntled housekeeper; to publicly declare the innocence of a widow of 41 who insists she had been seduced; to announce my firm faith in the noble and irreproachable character of a gentleman who had that day introduced himself to me; to help a dear old lady sell home hints and cooking recipes to the magazine editor; to ask a chauffeur's employer to give him a raise; to spend the vials of my wrath upon improper ladies in general and two improper ladies in particular; to give a Kansas lady information on birth control; to be a good influence in the life of a young minister; to inform the State of Kentucky upon the effect of the Red Light Abatement Act; to agitate for two women judges on the local bench; to pass upon the irreproachable efficiency of Whittier State School; and to support the brother of the friend of a friend of mine for the City Council.

I am flattered to death. I feel so entirely competent to settle all these little matters. But in at least half of the cases I have a dreadful suspicion that I should go absolutely contrary to the wishes of my correspondent. I am, for instance, pretty sure that I would have divorced the lady myself, that nothing would induce me to employ the maiden lady in any capacity if I had to pay her salary, that with the best intentions in the world I could not believe in the seduction against her will of a widow of 41, that the chauffeur was already overpaid, and that any information I could give on birth control would be utterly useless.

But of course, I have not been invited to make any such decisions as this. If, therefore, I fail to take up the missions these people have marked out for me I am entitled to nothing but gratitude from them on my masterly inactivity.

A Little Fallacy.

One observes in all the sensational movie dramas that the heroine, after she has lost one job and failed to get any other kind of a job, and has worn out all her nice clothes and starved herself into dejected misery, always has one profession open to her.

There is always some bold, bad, wicked connoisseur in femininity ready to purchase her charms at a generous figure.

Now this is not strictly true to life. We hate to dash the real-life heroine's ultimate hopes but as a matter of fact, cold, cruel, horrid fact, what with the dashing, professional and the talented amateur, there is always a glut in the market. And, alas, even some of the most worthy charms are absolutely unsalable.

The vice commissions love to dwell on the fantastic prices that virtue can obtain and the dashing millionaires who go around seeing whom they can shower their wicked gold upon, but these wicked, dashing millionaires are spry old birds and it takes a very clever and experienced professional indeed to make him come across.

As a matter of cold truth, there is practically no market for the innocent, inexperienced, worthy little amateur—the white slave movie dramas to the contrary. Why should anyone pay fabulous sums for anything that can be had for nothing? That is giving the wicked traducer credit where none is due. Besides, he would be risking a prison sentence—such a very unnecessary risk.

And so, fair maiden, don't bank on it. The movies lie. Better hunt one more safe, respectable job and stick to it when you've got it. The vast profits paid for virtue are even more exaggerated than the salaries of movie stars. Even the cleverest professional, primed with every trick of seductiveness, who has made a business of being charming for years, frequently finds the male of the species, especially the wicked ones, most disappointingly niggardly. The average man has such a good head for business, no matter what his other weaknesses.

Fire.

Nothing seems to create so much pleasurable excitement in a neighborhood as a fire. It is regarded as a free show. When somebody's home and all he possesses in the world is going up in smoke, automobiles and pedestrians flock to the scene and stand around gaping with no more emotion, or rather less, than they would evince at a display of fireworks on July 4th.

I have watched this sort of thing happen so often and marveled at the amazing lack of sympathy for and understanding of the tragedy that is taking place.

These are ordinary human beings, yet they seem to find nothing but entertainment in the event which must prove so utterly despairing to the victims. After all, we are not so very far removed from those ancestors of ours that found entertainment and thrills in the tossing of Christians to the lions. We still go to automobile races and aviation exhibitions in the hope that there will be a disastrous accident. And we can't pretend it is the war that has made us callous—we were tainted before that.

It scarcely seems decent to rush off to see a fire unless one is at least prepared to pray. If one is prepared to render some real, and preferably expensive service, go by all means. Otherwise neither the fire department nor the victims will be glad to see us.

Little Boy: Automobile.

The Real Arthur James Balfour.

limits himself to a critical examination of the theories of modern methods of philosophy. He suspects them all. Turn by turn he examines positivism, determinism, and materialism. In each of these systems he finds unreconcilable contradictions. He points out that each begins by posing certain postulates which must be accepted on faith. He asks repeatedly, by inference, why Englishmen should renounce in favor of these faulty and incomplete doctrines that destroy themselves by their own contradictions a religion that harmonizes with English institutions and that furnishes a base for morals, esthetics and a legitimate hope of future happiness.

Sixteen years later he published "Foundations of Belief." From the skepticism of his youth he had progressed to a plane where he was willing to accept on faith certain phenomena which human intellects have not yet been able to understand. In this volume the attacks against materialist doctrines are well directed and ably conducted. It leads to the concluding axiom that, "there is no veritable science without religion." By the employment of his critical faculties Mr. Balfour had become a defender, indirect but formidable, of Christianity.

Here is developed what may be termed the Balfour theorem:

"If a given principle is proven false, the inverse of that principle is probably true."

There is a further exemplification of this in "Theism and Humanity," published in 1914. In all his literary work, there is an elegance of diction and a perfection of form that attracts and charms even when the reasoning does not convince.

When one reads the collected fragments that appear in "Criticism and Beauty," published in 1909, one realizes that one greater than Ruskin was lost to English art and letters when Lord Salisbury literally threw his nephew into politics in 1874 by offering him as a candidate for a seat controlled by the Cecils.

Before that he had served as private secretary to his uncle when Lord Salisbury was Disraeli's foreign secretary. In that capacity he accompanied Lord Salisbury to Berlin to attend the European Congress following the close of the Russo-Turkish War in 1878.

Lord Salisbury quickly discovered that his elegant and indolent nephew concealed under a mask of nonchalance an intellect which he characterized later as "the greatest of all the Cecils." Young Balfour was bored terribly by his first term in Parliament and left for a tour of the world to escape re-election. But his family were determined that he should continue in public life. Another uncle, then a member of the House of Commons, used to bait the young aristocrat to force him to take part in the parliamentary debates. That marked the beginning of the career which has since won for him the title of, "The first parliamentarian in the first parliament of the world."

All the parliamentary addresses of Mr. Balfour are marked by a lack of hyperbole. He never exaggerates. To him that is a serious fault; exaggeration in words leads either to exaggeration in acts or to humiliating retreats. They may make the fortune of an orator but they ruin the reputation of a debater. Lucy's "Parliamentary Journal" records of Balfour in his fortieth year:

"Arthur Balfour is not an orator but the Chamber expects to see him become an excellent debater, and that is why it extends to him the widest latitude to develop himself in that direction."

Balfour has always held that speech in Parliament should serve for some purpose other than to gratify the lobby and furnish "copy" for the daily press. He believes that to convince one must be understood and that to be understood one must be concise and complete.

He never wasted words for effect. Even his occasional shafts of sarcasm are sped with a nonchalance that expresses an indifference as to whether they reach their mark. But he formulates and expresses his own thought with classic clearness. With a rare analytical power he follows that of his adversary into its most subtle shades, its minute details and its most distant consequences.

An episode in his political career in which Californians will be distinctly interested is his experiments with "rural credits" based on a government subsidy in Ireland.

When Gladstone lost the battle for Irish autonomy in 1886, and the premiership along with it, Arthur Balfour became Secretary of State for Scotland in a ministry formed by his uncle, Lord Salisbury. At that time he declined to accept a place in the Cabinet, although that place was due him by reason of his position. His only explanation was, "Cabinets are beastly bores."

One who has studied him closely will not be slow to realize that the real cause for this declination was that he feared the Cecil family might be accused of nepotism. He remained in this place but a short time when he was named Secretary of State for Ireland. This was in 1887, a dark period in Irish history.

There he displayed his devotion to duty, his high ideals for Ireland's economic future and his sincere desire to offer something that would be a cure and not a mere palliative for the political and economic ills of Ireland.

Balfour's appointment came as a shock to his Unionist associates. It seemed incredible that the "elegant and indolent Balfour" should accept a place that had wrecked, both physically and politically, a number of the most intelligent and intrepid statesmen of the century.

While his friends trembled alike for his personal and political safety, Parnell smiled grimly and prepared to slip the leash on his wild pack of Irish land leaguers. These boasted that they had made the redoubtable Hicks-Beach weep on the ministerial bench. What would they not do to Balfour?

A thrill of pleased anticipation ran through the ranks of the "home rule" protagonists when Balfour arose to make his first response to an insolent inquiry. His Unionist confreres saw in him a martyr approaching the stake. But they were quickly and happily reassured when they saw him standing courteous, smiling, wholly at his ease. There was a shade of raillery in look and tone as he took no notice of the insults that had accompanied the question, but contented himself with coldly demonstrating that the inferences on which the question was based were not founded in truth. It was brief and scintillating, like the parry of a practiced blade.

At the outset the Irish party referred to Balfour as "the faded lily," "the sick spider" and "daddy long-legs;" other epithets more coarsely insulting were also used. He displayed the same indifference to the abusive attacks of the Irish Nationalists that he has displayed during the last two years to the attacks of the Northcliffe string of English newspapers.

When he turned to the serious business of forming a new and constructive Irish policy the epithets of derision hardened quickly to hate. He was denounced as "murderer," "assassin," "Nero," "Caligua," "monster weltering in blood" and similar epithets.

Balfour stated his policy clearly and fearlessly as follows: "In that which touches repression, I shall be as pitiless as Cromwell. In reforms I shall surpass Parnell."

The new secretary for Ireland soon became convinced that the real Irish question was an agrarian question. Ireland was dying of hunger. To solve the Irish question it was necessary to establish industries to feed the Irish people. There must be an increase in production, a well fed Ireland would be a contented Ireland. The surest way to stop pillage by the peasants would be to make of each a petty land owner; they would not destroy their own property.

In short, the Balfour solution of the Irish question was, "rural credits." He secured the support of Parliament in a plan to extend government aid to Irish tenants in the purchase of the land they tilled. Landlords were willing to sell; the government credits enabled the farmers to buy the land at but little more than the former rental price. Peace was assured; prosperity was knocking at Erin's door.

But all this was thirty years ago. Time is a ruthless critic. I should like to be able to record that this pastoral dream of Irish prosperity and tranquillity came true.

For a time the plan worked, but the tenants could not acquire habits of preservation and conservation in a single generation. English speculators were ready to lend them money on their own holdings. Later, the mortgages were foreclosed, some of the peasants emigrated, some went back to rents and political discontent. The English government squandered $50,000,000 on the Balfour plan. The London speculators own all the small tracts now and the Irish question is as acute as ever.

Balfour may not have been at fault. If he had remained Secretary of State for Ireland he might have devised a way to protect the tenants in their holdings until a second generation should rise, better educated and better equipped to protect themselves.

It is interesting to note that the California Legislature in its recent session created a land colonization commission and equipped it with $260,000 for the purpose of purchasing large tracts of land from private owners in the State, cutting them up and reselling to small ranchers on long-term payments. This is a repetition of the Balfour plan to settle the Irish question. Let us hope that in this instance history will reverse itself.

Since his beginning as Secretary of State for Ireland Arthur Balfour has been a world figure. In Parliament he has been a consistent Unionist. He has opposed fearlessly the encroachments of the labor unions on the government of the empire. As a member of the opposition he has done much to check them in their ruinous course. If he held a similar position in this country he would be characterized as a member of the "Old Guard." Possibly Elihu Root is nearer his counterpart than any other man in American politics.

When the Unionist party was beaten by a Liberal and Labor coalition in 1906 Balfour sought to retire from party leadership. He was called into the coalition Cabinet in May, 1915, to become first lord of the admiralty, succeeding Winston Churchill. It was his political enemies that made the personal appeal to him to forget past insults and animosities in the hour of his country's need.

Balfour accepted nonchalantly, expressing a regret that the call of his country should interfere just at the time he was perfecting a new stroke in golf. But once into the admiralty he brought order out of chaos in a manner that was a marvel to the younger statesmen of Great Britain.

Under the new Cabinet, formed by Lloyd George, Balfour became Secretary for State for Foreign Affairs, and it is in that capacity that he visited the United States. He was welcomed to office by all but the Northcliffe press. Some of his shafts of sarcasm, more piercing than the most gross abuse, have left wounds there that will never heal. But he was not in the least affected by these personal attacks; he treated the Northcliffe outbursts with the same biting contempt that had characterized his attitude toward the Irish nationalists thirty years before.

Balfour is aging rapidly. He is now in his seventieth year; but the world is moving forward with magic strides. It is possible that this "elder statesman" may yet live to see the realization of a great hope by which he has been obsessed for thirty years, a hope for an offensive and defensive alliance between the greatest empire and the greatest republic that humanity has ever created.

If he were seeking revenge for past political affronts his gratification would be complete. No man in English politics had been more bitter in his attacks on Balfour than Lloyd George; but when the latter was called upon to form a Cabinet at the time when the wreckage of the British empire was threatened he turned from his Socialist and Labor allies and made a personal plea to Balfour to take the post of danger and of honor, that of Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Future historians may draw inferences that are not permissible at the present time from the fact that just three months after Balfour assumed charge of foreign affairs in the British Cabinet, the United States had aligned itself with the Entente Powers against the common enemy.

A New Industry.

[Indianapolis News:] Since a visitor to Florida discovered that pine needles made excellent nests for hens, driving away vermin and furnishing an added inducement to the fowl to lay eggs, the pine trees' discard has acquired a commercial value. Farmers have used the needles for bedding stock, making hens' nests and covering tender plants in winter for years, but they never regarded them as of any value commercially. A short time ago a northern man purchased three tons. Shortly after the shippers were surprised to receive a check for $54, at the rate of $18 a ton. News of the sale soon spread throughout the section, and now many able-bodied men who have no other occupation have gone to work gathering and baling the needles, and an industry has been started in supplying the demand for this product.

How Trick Plays Are Produced.

can manipulate the hands from behind the scenes.

You won't be able to detect it. For he holds them back or advances them only a few seconds at a time. If you laugh longer than he counted on, he holds them for the extra seconds necessary to accommodate your mirth.

But he isn't the only one that is playing the game. William Collier himself helps to adjust the length of the scene. If the action is going too fast for the clock he puts in impromptu lines. The result is that the actors on the stage and the anxious manager behind the scenes never know just how much of this Collieresque humor is going to be added. No wonder the manager mops his brow with relief when the clock finally chimes four.

No wonder, too, that everybody except the audience dreads these trick plays. Actors can cover up their mistakes, their lost cues, their forgotten lines. Erring stage hands can be fired. But you can and will sit up nights with a trick play and yet never be free from the fear that somewhere, sometime, something or some person will queer the whole business.

Poet Handicapped by Name.

[Montreal Star:] The handicap of a poet's name was illustrated in the case of Mr. William Wordsworth, who was the eldest surviving grandson of the poet, and who died recently at Rome 80 years old. Mr. Wordsworth was a great scholar and a poet himself of high distinction. A volume of his sonnets was issued privately some years ago. On account of the similarity of his name with that of his grandfather, he always refused to publish any of his poetical writings, though pressed to do so by the people of such high authority as Matthew Arnold, who described one of his sonnets as the finest in the English language.

Anzac.

[Christian Science Monitor:] Certainly one of the most historic telegraphic addresses of recent times is that which gave rise to the name "Anzac," by which the Australian and New Zealand forces in the war are known the world over. Sir W. R. Birdwood, in his introduction to "The Anzac Book," explains how, when he took over the command of the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps, in Egypt, he was asked to select a telegraphic code address for his army corps. He selected the word "Anzac," composed, of course, of the first letter of each word in the name of his command—the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps.

Luxuries and Necessities.

"GIVE me the luxuries of life and I will dispense with the necessities," said a bright epigrammatical soul once. It went home to a responsive heart with sympathetic understanding. Necessities are so mundane. They lack glamour. There is nothing quite so stodgy and unromantic as plentiful necessities and no luxuries.

And isn't it joyous in these war-economy days to know that we can indulge in luxuries to our heart's content, providing we are properly abstemious with the necessities? We must be frugal with bread, with vegetables, with meat, with leather, with medicinal requisites; she who wastes a slice of bread, the remains of yesterday's roast, or a sacred potato is an enemy to her country. But she may be as recklessly lavish with caviare, pate de foie gras, mushrooms, champagne sauces, anchovy essence, squabs, turtle, Bear Lake trout, venison, hot-house grapes and peaches as she jolly well likes.

We must be careful of plain household soaps and breakfast mush, yea, even unto eggs of wide experience and ambitiously mobilizing cheese, of the tag ends of the chops, and the skins of the potatoes, but if we own half a dozen luxurious automobiles we are positively doing the country a service, contributing handsomely to the war taxes and basking in the luxurious sense of holding them in readiness for army requisition.

It is perfectly comme il faut for us to play bridge for the Red Cross, but it would be peculiarly reprehensible of us to start doing our own laundry and take the bread out of the mouths of needy laundry employees. To start washing our own heads and manicuring our own nails would be sheer hoggishness—do we want to put all the hairdressers and manicurists out of business, poor things? And it would be little short of criminal on our part to cease going to theaters and picture shows—for is not the government hopeful of raising vast revenue from our continued addiction to pleasure, by its little war taxes? And it was all very well for the masculine resoluter to cut down on his smokes and wines on January 1; but nowadays, what is the government going to do for revenue if we all reform in this respect? It is banking on us to do our duty. Every 25-cent cigar means a cent for the upkeep of the nation's income.

And with the increased taxes on imported luxuries, who shall say that an affluent madame is not "doing her bit" when she buys herself a $5 pot of face cream direct from martyred Paris? Who feels an urge to improve her charms with expensive face powders, rouges, lip sticks, perfumes, bathing luxuries, hair tonics and treatments, face massages, wrinkle destroyers, switches, eye lotions, and bust-improvers? Nay, if she takes to bathing in champagne, who shall say her nay?

We must be sparing of wool because that is needed for the socks and sweaters for the troops—and wool is perfectly horrid next to the skin. But there isn't a soldier boy that covets a crepe de chine nightie or a chiffon undervest—the most generous of governments has not suggested that. They don't even want silk socks and pajamas and giddy ties—but we shall be strictly within "common-sense war economy" if we go on supporting those industries judiciously—do we want to throw the manufacturers and department stores into bankruptcy?

And as for subscribing to profitable war loans—the piggier we are about that the better? Is not a government official now touring the country to arouse our enthusiasm for investment profit?

We mustn't be hogs and hoard food necessities, but if we want to hoard hot-house roses and early gladioli and triple dahlias, we shall be doing the florists a valuable turn. We may even lay down wine cellars for the next generation with reckless generosity without incurring our country's disapproval. And the more whisky we annex, for strictly hoarding purposes, the larger our contribution to the national treasury, to say nothing of our very real contribution to national sobriety, since the country is agreed the troops must be prohibitionist. It is even hinted they may be denied tobacco, so the more iniquitous cigarettes we consume or hoard these days, the greater our sacrificial reform of our betters.

Fiction and Cooking.

IN A very short time The Times will be able to announce the the name of the winner of the short story contest. The last manuscripts are now being read by the judges. Owing to the great number of stories submitted the work has been complicated and arduous. Hundreds of manuscripts were sent. The anxious authors are manifesting considerable impatience. They can be assured that they are nearing the end of the vigil.

Meanwhile a new and equally interesting contest has started.

This is an ecoonmy cooking contest. Each week a prize of $5 will be offered for some special dish, fifty points to be awarded for quality and fifty points for economy. The senders of recipes will be required to state the cost of preparing each recipe sent in.

Ancient Gold Relics from Costa Rica.

Indigenous Art. From the "South American."

THE supremacy of Central and South America is now established among all the countries in the world as a veritable Mecca and wonderland, yielding up to modern scientific research rare forms of bird and animal life, as well as rich buried treasure, relics of the splendid civilization of the past as revealed by the spade of the archeologist.

These splendid gold ornaments and buried treasures were found in the graves of the people and rulers of the ancient civilization that flourished in the present region of Costa Rica, and in the Isthmus of Panama.

The fortunate incident that furnished the clew and led up to the first find of gold objects is unique and interesting. At Mercedes, in Northern Costa Rica, there is now a great banana plantation, the site of which was formerly covered with a dense forest. One night a storm swept over Mercedes and upturned a great tree. The next day in the earth that still clung to the upturned roots, the plantation owner caught the glitter of gold, and upon examination thirty pieces of ancient goldcraft were found. The great tree had grown over the grave of some forgotten chief, and its roots had enmeshed the funeral offerings.

Fifteen thousand objects in gold, pottery and stone were recovered. Most of the gold objects were seemingly worn as ornaments before being buried with their owners. They portray the characteristic animal life of the region, and many also have a mythological or religious significance.

Many of the most beautiful pieces are amulets or brooches, wrought in the shape of frogs, crabs, lizards, turtles and alligators. These little figures are all provided on the underside with a ring for suspension. A number of the amulets represent birds with outstretched wings. Some show the amalgamation of two birds into a single figure. Among the unique gold specimens is a large spider with egg ball attached.

In these ancient gold pieces of Costa Rica the close relations existing between man and the animal life that surrounded him are vividly brought out. The animals that were powerful or possessed some special efficiency were transformed into gods. Many, therefore, represent gods in human, animal and bird form. Some of the finest specimens of gold work in the collection are those that show some of the highly conventionalized figures of gods represented with the human body and a characteristic animal head. One series has canopies made of rectangular gold plates on standards. The animal gods in question are shown in the act of devouring a fish, a snake and a lizard respectively. The head dresses of these deified birds are elaborated with the profile head of a crocodile. Many exquisite examples of metal work are in the shape of gold bells, a number are also modeled in the form of birds, monkeys and grotesque heads. Gold bells served as a medium of exchange among the ancient peoples of Central America and Mexico.

A series of breast ornaments, including disc-shaped gorgets of beaten gold have designs in repousse work. The majority of these elaborate gold figures were cast in one piece, some, however, in several pieces, afterwards welded together. The various ornaments show excellently the skill the ancient goldsmiths of Costa Rica had achieved before the coming of Europeans, in hammering, engraving and casting of metals. Hollow castings were made by building the patterns of wax or resin over a core of clay. The rough castings were finished off by hammering and burnishing. Two kinds of gold plating were accomplished, one a heavy plating made over copper and the other a very thin impermanent gilding. Most of the magnificent specimens are of pure gold.

A Patient Man.

"I'm slow to anger, I admit,"
  Said Hezekiah Bings.
"In patience frequently I sit
  An' take a lot o' things
That strike me as a bit unfair
  An' willfully unkind.
I don't git mad an' paw the air,
  But keep 'em in my mind.

"And as the days go driftin' on,
  With Time's relentless pace,
Each old time care seems almost gone.
  A new one takes its place.
So what's the use, since time is brief,
  And wrath is mostly bluff,
Of nursin' a cold storage grief
  Instead o' brand new stuff?"

People Who Come to My Door.

overdress." I fervently wished I could.

"Wouldn't you like to have me recite for you?" I insisted that it would be asking too much.

"Oh, no indeed, nothing is too much for one from God's country."

Just what did she mean by that?

Majestically the P.P.P. arose—advanced toward my tiny dining-room and addressed herself to the electric dome arrangement over the dining-room table.

"This," she declared, "will for the time being represent our dear, old, time honored Liberty Bell." Then she began and standing, first on one foot and then on the other, retreating, advancing, gesturing gently with her short arms, hands held always at the proper angle with the little finger raised and crooked, allowing the proper expressions to flit across her face at the proper moments, she apostrophized the Liberty Bell. Never once did her eyes stray from the poor, defenceless dome. She alliterated, she symbolized, and she metaphored—she hyperboled—in rolling unctuous stanzas, she mourned and rejoiced and—after about thirty stanzes—in a wild burst of enthusiasm, she laid at its feet the encomiums and heartfelt gratitude of every freed soul in our glorious and independent commonwealth.

I was entranced and told her so. She was entranced because I was and altogether it was a lovely party. She then went on to tell me that her cousin had written the thing and had presented it to the government and that President Wilson was so delighted with it that he had ordered it encased in a frame of solid gold and placed in Independence Hall, right under our glorious, cracked bell. I've often wondered if that was true; do you suppose it is?

I marveled that, with her remarkable ability, she should be selling washing powder and then my great hour struck. She took me into her confidence and laid bare her life's secrets.

"I am telling you this," a world weary note crept into her deep voice, "because I feel that you can understand—"

It waxed toward noon and the lunch hour, but I listened with bated breath.

"My life was wrecked and I felt that there was nothing left to live for. He was a drug clerk and I loved him dearly . . . he was so clean and noble looking . . . I called him Perfume and Flowers . . . . he made me think of them. I, who have been wooed by twelve lawyers, eight doctors and ten college professors—" (she ran to figures)—"I loved a drug clerk. But he scorned my love . . . . said cruel things about me and crushed the fresh beauty of my affections. It was repeated to me that he even went so far as to call me a 'fat slob.'" She held her hand to her heart with her elbow raised, in the most approved gesture of anguish. "But I have my revenge," a sweeping motion with the same arm, "ah, I have my revenge. He is to this day called Perfume and Flowers by everyone and he doesn't like it." Strange, I thought. "So now, you will understand, honey, why I sell washing powder—I am walking off my unhappy love affair. I have been in every city on the coast from Portland to San Diego and I am slowly regaining my peace of mind. The wide world is so wonderful and everyone is so good to me. I love everyone I talk to during the day, God bless 'em. Everyone buys from me and many of the ladies have asked me to lunch." Her black eyes regarded me hopefully.

No, patient peruser, I did not.

However, I must admit that, to cover up the embarrassing episode, I hastily bought several boxes of washing powder.

As she corpulently edged sideways through my small French door, she said, hissingly, "I do not speak to my sister any more. She has killed all my love for her." At my enquiring look she paused on the porch to explain. "Honey, she has insulted me in a way that I can never forgive. Would you believe it? She ordered a consultation of physicians to investigate my sanity. Can you imagine anything so absurd?"

I pondered mightily after she had gone.

There was the man who sold brushes for every purpose in the world . . . ceiling, floor, wall, clothes, hair, paint, tooth, nail, scrub, etc., ad. lib., and wouldn't go until he had gone over the entire list and confided to me that he was an inventor.

There was the delicate lady who sold books and belonged to a mystic, occult society that performed weird rites. She looked Laura Jean Libbyish and I know had had a sad life but I was busy that morning.

Then there was the cheery, hopeful man who had been a lineman and had been nearly killed by an electric shock. I liked him. He was asking help to buy himself a cork leg. I hope he got it . . . . he was such a happy, optimistic soul. He told me of his accident. In a cold, gray dawn he was sent out to locate a crossed circuit, just at the hour when the night circuit is turned off and the day circuit turned on. Through some carelessness in the power house, the night circuit was left on and he, on the top of a pole, with his hands grasping the day and his feet on the night wires, received the full voltage through his body. By one of the strange freaks of electricity, he lived through it—what every one will tell you is an impossibility.

"It interested me to find out," he said, "that while I was unconscious in the hospital, Czolgocz, who assassinated McKinley, was electrocuted. The number of volts he received was far less than had passed through me.

"Quite the strangest thing of all is the obsession of fear that remains with me. No matter how hard I try to overcome it, I cannot. It is utterly impossible for me to pick up a piece of wire or touch metal. I have determined, time and again, to overcome this but my muscles refuse to do my bidding. Why, I cannot step on a street car rail, even with this," and he pointed to his wooden stump.

In spite of his terrible mutilations he was glad to be alive and looked forward to finding an occupation and a place in the world of men.

I often think of the gentle, little, old grandmother lady who made and sold perfumes and face lotions. She was such a dear I could hardly let her go. She had a tiny garden where she raised the flowers that she distilled into perfumes. A dainty, little body with soft, fluffy, white hair and the look that told at once that she was unused to poverty and hardship.

She had come West with an invalid husband, who had died after a lingering illness which had used up all their savings, and she was left to face life with no income and a crippled daughter. Brave and smiling, she had solved her problems with a fine courage, and life was kind to her. I still have a bottle of her spicy rose geranium and it always brings up the picture of her clearcut, ivory face with its snappy and enthusiastic brown eyes.

How I do love enthusiasm. It is the big motive power that keeps this old world moving—the divine fire that keeps us young.

I know you would appreciate the Greek boy who drives the vegetable wagon, what a story lies there and how his soft eyes light up when he tells me of his father's home near Napoli . . . the gray green olive grove and the golden oil. That boy is just plain homesick. I never will forget how nearly shocked I was when, in his soft, broken English, he told me, in detail, over the carrots and oranges, all about the baby they were expecting, nor the wonderful, happy day when the most bee-yu-ti-ful, littla girl in the world arrived. He rang his bell wildly and feverishly in front of the house until I came out. He simply couldn't make change that day and begged me to pay him some other time. His radiant smile made my whole day bright.

And now I come to the best of all, the boy who sold books to pay his way through college.

My greatest weakness is that I cannot refuse a book agent. I love books and my dearest ambition is to own a library. I spend many precious hours poring over book catalogues and lists and I know I am considered an easy mark by the great army of book agents.

This boy interested me from the start, not only because of his soul-tantalizing array of book offers, but because of his earnest and compelling personality. He was, I should judge, past 20 years old—tall, slender, with a refined, aquiline face and his big gray eyes glowed with a quiet determination. We talked a long time about books and magazines before he yielded to the astral vibrations before mentioned and told me his story.

He was preparing for college in a small town in Pennsylvania when his father died—his mother had been dead many years—and their small income, his father's salary, ceased. He pluckily resolved to work his way through the technical school where he wished to finish in electrical engineering. Unfortunately, his health failed and he was ordered west. Still plucky and with undampened ardor, he made arrangements to enter the technical school at Los Angeles—working with magazine clubs and books during the vacation months to defray his expenses.

He was in his second year and stood remarkably well—he told me his grades with pride. It seems that this school guarantees a position to every graduate. He came to see me every time he came to the city and I began to feel a proprietary interest in him and begged my friends to save their magazine subscriptions for him. Then one day, several months after I had first seen him, he called me over the telephone and in a quick, excited voice, asked me if I should be at home that morning.

"Yes," I said, "but I have no orders for you."

"Ah, it's not that," he exulted, "something wonderful has happened and I want to tell you."

And so he came, his fine face flushed and beaming. Wasn't it dear of him to come away out here to tell me of his happiness?

"Nearly three weeks ago," he began, "I stopped at a house on Fourth street and the sweetest old lady came to the door. I showed her the set of children's books, you know them, and she bought two for her grandchildren. That just made up the amount for my first term's tuition and I told her so. I was so glad to make such a large sale, you know. Like you, she was at once interested and before I knew what I was doing, I told her the whole story. When I happened to mention that my father was a Mason, she looked thoughtful and asked several questions. When I had babbled along for I don't know how long, she asked for my name and told me to come back in two weeks. I thought she might buy more books then, so I did as she asked and returned yesterday.

"What do you think? She had written back home to find out if my story was true and this is what she had to tell me:

She said that her husband had died six months before and that the Masonic Lodge had given her a check for his funeral expenses. She couldn't bear to use it for that and had laid it away until she found someone whom it would help and who would profit by it. Not charity, she said, but something that she could have before her as a lasting tribute to his memory. And she was nice enough to feel that my education would be that.

"Isn't it wonderful—my whole course is paid for now and I am free, free to put my whole time on my studies.

"And," he finished gravely, "I must and will make her proud of me and make of myself a fitting memorial to her husband."

My heart warmed to the giver of this happiness—if I could, that is the way I should choose to help others. Not by giving clothes and food to failures, but to open opportunities of success to those who hunger and aspire for better things.

And now I have finished—there are many more that I should like to have you know but time and space forbid.

The only one who, so far, has resisted the A.V. is our Celestial laundry man whose euphonious name is Quong Chong. He comes and departs, an impenetrable mystery, veiled in a yellow haze of Orientalism that hints of opium, josses and tantalizing tong feuds.

[Kansas City Journal:] "Why won't you marry me?"

"Because I don't love you."

"Why need that matter? We'd simply have a five-year start on half the people in our set."

Sacrificing Freedom.

DEMOCRACY'S case against imperialism is based on the premise that rational beings, possessing a knowledge of good and evil, are capable of governing themselves. Imperialism is founded on the assumption that there is a breed of supermen to whom a divine power has given dominion over the races of the earth. To these supermen is accredited a superior intellect that enables them to maintain civilization on a higher plane than can be attained under self-government.

At the present moment the democracies of the earth have challenged the assumed divine right of these supermen to world dominion, and the issue is fairly joined. We have pledged our blood and our treasure to the cause of democracy; we have linked our fate with that of the Entente Powers and, as the greatest exponent of free institutions and individual liberty, the fight we are now waging is in reality that of freedom itself.

But we are confronted at the outset with the menace of sacrificing free institutions at home as a means of establishing them elsewhere. Free speech, a free press and a representative government where the will of the majority shall be the dominant force—these are the tenets of American liberty. The American commonwealth is founded on the principle of self-government. To us the assumption by any men or set of men to superiority over the others is intolerable. We are pledged to the principle vox populi vox dei.

President Wilson, by reason of his exalted position, has become the medium of expression of the thought of the nation. When he was elevated to the Presidency he ceased to be the man to become the symbol of one hundred million. By the oath which he has taken all private and personal opinions must be subjugated to the will of the great American people.

In order to give an expression to this will, however, it is necessary that he shall labor diligently to discover what the composite thought of the nation really desires. He should not lose sight of the dominating principle of all democracy; it is not the voice of Wilson, but the voice of the people that is the voice of God. To assume to himself the obligation of thinking and acting for the whole nation is to assume the very autocratic power which we have entered this struggle for the purpose of breaking.

Republics are great when great intellects are exalted to high positions and when these intellects are joined for the common good. There have been indications of late that the President was not interpreting correctly the voice of the people. We believe that this is occasioned in part by the fact that he lacks competent counselors, that he is too much addicted to playing a lone hand. He resembles a carpenter trying to construct an edifice with a single tool.

It is unfortunate that President Wilson has surrounded himself with men of small caliber. In the Democratic party there is a paucity of good material. The President declines to go outside the ranks of his political supporters to seek advisers, and there is a grave doubt whether his Cabinet is composed of the highest intellects that the Democratic party affords. His present Cabinet members are recalled to our memory only by their blunders. This may be the secret reason that the President advises with them so little.

There are great men still in our republic; men of proved worth; men whose patriotism has never been questioned. Greater confidence would be felt by the American people if men of the type of Taft, Root and Lodge were among the President's immediate advisers. But he seems to fight shy of them for purely political reasons.

We have every confidence in the integrity and patriotic purpose of President Wilson. But we must repeat that there would be a feeling of greater security among the people if the President were to include among his advisers men, irrespective of party, who have been proved in the past and not found wanting; and if he would be guided in his actions less by personal impulse and more by their counsels.

War's Ingenuity.

WAR has become as specialized as any science, and has given rise to many picturesque developments. Even artists are being enlisted, not to thrill patriots with vivid pictures, but to delude and hoodwink the enemy. In France today there are several thousand artists engaged in manufacturing scenery to conceal artillery emplacements. Roads have even been painted on muslin and lifted above the real road highways along which troop movements were made that evaded the eyes of German outposts, and naturally the artillery would not waste shells on what appeared to be a deserted highway.

In the beginning the Germans surprised the world by going over the battlefields and gathering up every rag and button, all debris, and sorting it into piles that were later used as raw material for new products. Now the English and French are just as thrifty. The English search the battlefields as thoroughly as ever the Germans did, and find as valuable use for the debris.

On the Italian front (which is longer than the French, English and Belgian front combined) there are stations so inaccessible that men are lifted to them by cables; and in some places the Austrian and Italian soldiers are in trenches less than six feet apart.

Submarines, German U-boats, because of the increasing dangers of the Allies' mines and nets, are going out to sea in droves; and instead of cruising about as formerly, they settle down and wait for victims to come within range. This method saves fuel and enables the boats to remain out indefinitely; while, with many submarines "planted" along the trade channel, the ship that evades one U-boat will probably be caught by the next, or the next.

It was said, when the war started, that modern ingenuity had taken all the romance and dramatic quality out of fighting. But it has not. Wherever there are perils there must always be dramatic heroism; and particularly the prisoners who have been escaping from Germany have harrowing tales to tell of their narrow "squeaks." One French officer, imprisoned near the eastern front, and unable to speak a word of German, made his way across the country and entered Holland without having spoken to a single person in the forty days it took to make the trip.

Home Rule in Ireland.

IRELAND is still in the throes of its struggle for home rule, and seems no nearer now than she was when the century began. The situation in Ireland is one hard for Americans to understand. The trouble with Ireland is that her sentiment is too much divided. The north does not want home rule and the rest of the country does. England, of course, would rather not give Ireland home rule, and never will except under compulsion. Scotland and Wales are indifferent.

The American's point of view, so hard to apply to Ireland, comes from our own federation of States. It seems as undesirable that Massachusetts should make laws for California as that England should make laws for Ireland. If things were in Great Britain as they are in America there would be a federation of the four kingdoms, giving Scotland, Wales and Ireland autonomy over local affairs, and then have a Parliament like our Congress where measures common to the four kingdoms might be had.

Our government at Washington has taken up the subject of home rule for Ireland, and of course may bring it about at the settlement when the war is over. There is more likelihood of it now than ever before. Heretofore it has been Protestant against Catholic and Catholic against Protestant, but these religious differences are becoming very much modified and milder.

Premier David Lloyd George has proposed a measure of home rule for Ireland that would leave out Ulster from the Irish Parliament. Here is another proposition incomprehensible to America. It would be as in our Civil War, if someone had proposed ending that terrible conflict by leaving out Texas, South Carolina or any other of the Southern States. Of course such a proposition would never have been entertained for a moment.

The only good thing that may be said for Germany is that she has fought a good fight in a bad cause. The people of Germany are not so much to blame. They are more sinned against than sinning. With a part of the populace obsessed with false ideals of loyalty and a part of them fearing to hint their hatred for the crown, there was nothing left to do but fight. Most of the blame for the whole bloody business is to be laid at the doors of the Kaiser and the leaders of Prussian militarism whose dreams of world dominion are largely responsible for the continuation of the greatest struggle in all history. However, tyranny is doomed in every part of the earth. With practically all the world lined up on the side of democracy as against autocracy, the throne of the Hohenzollerns is tottering and the misgovernment of a great empire is nearing its close.

We are an emotional people, and our emotions are very often founded on misconception. You would think when the onion supply was nearly exhausted the other day, and the price of this pungent vegetable went climbing like the bean up Jack's pole, that there would never be another spring or another onion crop in the country. While we were shrieking our indignation, Texas came in, shipping her new crop of onions throughout the country at the rate of 100 carloads a day.

Shots from the Magazine.

No "heavy firing" heard off Cape Cod recetnly. The last noise was only caused by the cod-fish codifying.

English astronomers report the discovery of a new comet. Possibly dropping in to buy a Liberty bond.

Don't hear so much about the use of "tanks" in the army since the passage of the bill providing for prohibition.

If the war continues there will be no professional baseball next year. Well, Los Angeles can stand it, it is a long time since we have had any.

There would be a boom in war enlistments if everybody could get there a pass. Everybody in this country is just crazy to get in on a pass.

Russia promises to have a Congress modeled after that of the United States. In that case the country might as well make up its mind to be disappointed.

There is no truth in the rumor that the last men who volunteers will be stationed farthest from the front. This announcement is made to correct an erroneous imcurrency.

The Germans have no doubt abandoned the coal mines at Lens because warm weather is coming on, and coal is not needed, and at the same time saddling the cost of operations upon the Allies.

Resignation.

Oh, what's the use of kicking
Because prices are so high?
We always knew the time would come
When we should have to die;

And maybe death by starving
Won't be so awful tough.
At least 'twill end our trying to live
On nowhere near enough.

Ah, those were halcyon days when spuds
Were thirty cents a peck,
And even twice that would seem low
To us right now, by heck!

And prices soared, I, one by one
Have taken from my list
Things, without which, I once would thought
I never could exist.

But when potatoes went up so
That I could only hope
To see them very dimly through
A high power telescope,

Oh, then indeed, it seems to me
That it is time to quit,
And leave this world to those who've got
The price to stay in it.

So folks, just stop your whining,
Be cheerful, I entreat.
Let us kick the bucket gamely,
If we can't afford to eat.

What Other People Say

Marietta, Ga., May 17th, 1917.

Howard & Smith,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen:—I just want to write and tell you how delighted I am with the Rose "Los Angeles" you sent me in February. I put it out in the open ground and have had seven beautiful Roses to date.

I had them on exhibition in my store for the last few days and have drawn hundreds of people to see them. All the old rose growers are unanimous that it is the handsomest Rose they ever saw. You have been well advertised and will get many inquiries from it. I inclose clipping and photo of the Rose.

Yours respectfully,
E. L. STRINGER.

Rehmannia

A handsome new herbaceous plant from China. Large tubular shaped flowers, deep rich rose pink in color. Once planted they increase in beauty season after season. Regular price $2.00. Special, per dozen $1.00.

Scabious

A superb strain in all colors. Splendid for cut flower purposes. Regular price, per dozen 50c.

Special price, per dozen 40c.

Zinnias—H. & S. Prize Strain

Mammoth blossoms in all colors. Mixed or the separate shades of orange and yellow or scarlet and crimson. Regular price 50c dozen. Special per dozen 45c.

10,000 Ragged Robin Roses

We have the above quantity of these splendid Roses on hand. Just the thing for aligning a drive, planting in parkways, etc. The plants are fine strong two-inch pot plants, grown from soft wood cuttings, ready for lining out. They will produce an abundance of flowers during the coming Autumn and Winter.

Possibly you have a piece of country property and are wondering what to plant around the margins of same. Here is a suggestion for you, and the price is one you cannot overlook.

Extra strong two-inch pot plants—Per hundred $6.00. Per thousand $50.00. Fifty plants at the hundred rate.

10,000 Eucalyptus

We have left about 100 flats of splendid strong plants, averaging eight to twelve inches high, 90 to 110 plants to the flat.

A special offer to clean these up—$1.50 per flat.

5000 English Ivy

Extra fine strong plants grown from cuttings, well established in two-inch pots. Just the thing you need for planting under the shade of trees, as a ground cover on a shady bank, for covering brick walls, etc.

Per hundred $6.00; 25 or 50 plants at hundred rate.
